Missouri's Taxation Problem and How It Can Be Solved

Prof. Loeb of the State University, a Noted Authority, Explains for the Post-Dispatch Our Revenue and Assessment Shortcomings and Tells Why He Believes a Tax Commission Is the Only Means by Which the Errors in the Present System Can Be Corrected.

By DR. ISIDOR LOEB,

Dean of the Faculty of Missouri University at Columbia, Mo., and a widely-known authority on taxation.

FOR many years public officials and students of taxation have called attention to some grave defects in Missouri's tax system. During the present year the failure of the State revenue to meet the necessary appropriations for State institutions has directed public attention to the seriousness of one phase of the problem. It is an opportune time to consider the chief defects and the appropriate remedies.

Any system of taxation should possess two essential characteristics. First, capacity to produce revenue adequate for all necessary public needs, and second, an equitable basis for distributing the burden of the tax. It has been indicated above that during the present year Missouri's system has failed to produce adequate revenue. This, however, is only an acute phase of a situation which has existed for many years during which the State has been prevented from undertaking important activities by reason of the general inadequacy of State revenue. That this situation has not been due to extravagant legislative appropriations may be shown by an examination of the actual figures for State revenue and a comparison with similar statistics for some neighboring states. The following figures are taken from the official State reports for the year 1914, which are the latest published.

STATE	Receipts for General State Purposes
Illinois	$23,919,460
Indiana	8,136,483
Iowa	6,101,659
Kansas	5,341,313
Minnesota	14,190,162
Missouri	5,981,134

Missouri's Revenue Below That of States With Less Wealth

WHILE Missouri surpasses most of the above states in wealth and population, its revenue for State purposes is much less than any of these states except Kansas, which has only one-half the population of Missouri. Missouri, moreover, appropriates to the counties one-third of its general revenue fund for public school purposes.

Deducting the amount appropriated for this purpose in 1914 there remained only $3,833,318 for the support of the departments of the State government and of State institutions. These include the two houses of the General Assembly, the Supreme, three Appellate and 38 Circuit Courts, the elective State executive officers, upwards of 50 State departments, bureaus, boards and commissions, a State University with its 10 colleges and schools, five State normal schools, Lincoln Institute, a State school for the deaf and one for the blind, two State homes for old soldiers, four State hospitals for the insane, an institution for the feeble minded, a sanitorium for tuberculosis, a State penitentiary, a State reformatory and two industrial homes for girls.

It will be of interest in this connection to note that the general municipal revenue of St. Louis, exclusive of that collected for debt, interest, water works and schools, for the fiscal year ending April 12, 1915, was $10,650,715. In other words, the city of St. Louis had available for its ordinary expenses nearly three times the amount possessed by Missouri for its general State expenses. During the same year St. Louis spent $2,139,446 for its Police Department, or nearly two-thirds of the amount expended by Missouri for all departments.

One of the curious results to which partisanship eads is shown in the charge of extravagance in tate expenditures which each political party in urn makes against the other. While individual ases of extravagance may be found, it is submitted that, with the revenue indicated above, no government which undertook to meet the necesary demands of State departments and institutions would have anything of consequence left n wasteful appropriation. As a matter of fact he revenue has been wholly inadequate and Gov. ajor found it necessary to veto amounts approiated by the last General Assembly aggregating 86,230. In nearly all of the cases the cause the veto was lack of revenue, rather than ob tion to the character of the appropriation.

Funds for State Purposes 25 Per Cent Below Appropriations

THE appropriations after deduction of the amounts vetoed were still in excess of the probable revenue and the Governor held additional amounts aggregating $1,452,015, until such time as the condition of the revenue might justify the expenditure. Instead of improving, however, the situation became worse. Not only were these amounts not released, but at the beginning of this year the Governor was compelled to resort to the extraordinary procedure of notifying State departments and institutions that certain amounts which had been fully approved could not be expended because of the condition of the general revenue fund. The amounts held up by this action of the Governor aggregated about $2,500,000, making a total reduction of approximately $4,700,000 in the amounts which the Legislature thought necessary, a decrease of more han 25 per cent. The situation is very critical, as many institutions had already planned the expenditures and will be greatly crippled by this third trimming of legislative appropriations.

This recent action of the Governor is significant as indicating that the State revenue situation has become more acute during the present biennial period. This is due to the decrease in the revenue from saloon licenses and from the beer inspection tax because of the growth of local option and to the decline in revenue from the State penitentiary, owing to the abandonment of the contract labor system in that institution.

While Missouri Legislatures cannot be charged with extravagance, they have failed to make provision for adequate revenue to meet the growing needs of the State and have neglected to supply the deficiency in existing sources of revenue due to the spread of dry territory and the loss of earnings of convicts.

Few Missourians Realize How Light State Taxes Really Are

FEW people realize how very slight is the burden of State taxation in Missouri. One may think that his taxes are high, but he usually overlooks the fact that about 95 per cent of this amount is for county, city and school purposes. The total tax rate for State purposes in Missouri is only 18 cents on the $100 assessed valuation. Of this amount 3 cents is used for interest and public debt, leaving 15 cents for general revenue, of which, as indicated above, one-third is returned to the counties for public school purposes. Hence of the State tax on property only 10 cents on the $100 assessed valuation is used for the needs of the State. A man with a farm or house assessed for $1000, pays $1 in taxes for State purposes. As the assessed value ranges from 20 per cent to 60 per cent of the real value, the burden of taxation for State purposes averages less than 4 cents on the $100 real value of property, or less than one-twenty-fifth of 1 per cent.

That the burden of State taxation in Missouri is relatively as well as absolutely slight is shown by the following table of comparative tax rates for State purposes and assessed valuations of property for the year 1914:

STATE	Tax rate for State purposes on $100 assessed value.	Assessed value of taxable property.
Indiana	38 2-3c	1,939,876,166
Iowa	49c	932,476,912
Kansas	12c	2,804,789,903
Minnesota	47 1-2c	1,369,000,000
Missouri	15c	1,888,241,787

Kansas Property Assessed Nearly a Billion More Than Missouri's

KANSAS is the only State whose tax rate is lower than Missouri, but it will be noted that the assessed value of property in Kansas is nearly $1,000,000,000 in excess of that in Missouri. This is due to the fact that in Kansas property is assessed at its full value, while in Missouri the average is less than 40 per cent of the real value. As 12 cents on full value is equal to 30 cents on a 40 per cent valuation, the actual burden of State taxation in Kansas is double that in Missouri.

This is further shown by the fact that in 1914 the State tax on property brought into the general revenue fund of Missouri only $2,711,222, as compared with $3,345,712 in the State of Kansas.

In some states the problem of adequate state revenue has been solved by increasing the tax rate for state purposes. Thus, for example, in Illinois, the rate has been increased to 70 cents for the State University. In Missouri the Legislature cannot increase the rate of taxation as the Constitution provides that the tax rate for State purposes cannot exceed 15 cents on the $100 assessed valuation. Kansas also has retained a low tax rate, but has secured adequate revenue by increasing the assessed value of property to its full value. In Missouri the Legislature has provided by statute for the assessment of property at "its true value," but this law has not been enforced and property is assessed at different rates in different counties, but in all cases much below its real value.

The explanation of the failure to enforce the laws of Missouri requiring property to be assessed at its true value is to be found in the character

New War Secretary Glad He Is a Little Man and Looks Young

Because Everyone Is Always Saying: "Give the Boy a Chance"

Newton D. Baker Believes These Physical Characteristics Have Obtained Hearings for Him That Have Enabled Him to Climb in the World When Without Them Nobody Would Have Paid Any Attention to Him.

His Ambition Has Been to Do Nothing but Practice Law, but Destiny, in the Guise of Politics, Has Compelled Him to Do Almost Everything Else, and Now That He Is at the Head of Our War Department, He Is Confident He Can Handle the Duties of That Place as Well as He Has Handled Other Difficult Roles.

By ROWLAND THOMAS,

WASHINGTON, March 18.

"NEWTON D. BAKER," I had been told by a man well acquainted with him, "is the kind of thoroughly good citizen we all approve of highly—and fail to imitate! He has lofty ideals. He has high principles. He is utterly sincere. He is simple and unaffected, both in thought and life. He has a clear, well-disciplined mind. He has an extraordinary command of concise and effective speech. Without being in the least effusive, he is a good mixer. You will find him full of charm. Out in Cleveland he lived in a modest frame house with his wife and three children, smoked 5-cent tobacco in a 25-cent pipe, drove his own Ford and for amusement read Greek and Latin books on the streets cars.

"It is interesting to notice," my informant added, "that he is the second of Tom Johnson's disciples to be lifted into prominence by President Wilson. Brand Whitlock is the other.

"It is hardly exaggeration to say that Brand Whitlock, in Belgium, has proved himself a great man. Will Baker be as successful in the War Department?

"Frankly, much as I like him personally, I am wondering whether he will measure up to the job. What he has done he has done well. But—he has never been tested out in really big affairs. Has he the capacity for them? You know, a 38-caliber revolver may be a perfect weapon—as a revolver—but fail lamentably if pressed into service as a seacoast gun.

"Is Newton D. Baker big enough to be Secretary of War at a time like this? That's what I'm asking myself. That's what the country is asking itself, I think."

Naturally, those remarks ran through my head as I talked with the new Secretary of War this week. I saw him twice, once in his modest bedroom at the University Club, where he is living for the present as a bachelor "because the children are in school in Cleveland and we don't want to break into their year."

The second time he was in his office in the War Department, the office to which one penetrates through that dread antechamber where hang the portraits of all the previous incumbents of the office. If ever I were Secretary I should enter my office by some other passage. It would be altogether too depressing to face daily the effigies of all the forgotten worthies who were once even as great as I.

He Is a Little Man but His Appearance Is Not Dwarfish

ON both occasions I got the same impression of the physical man. Nature, in molding his body, did a neat job. He is a markedly small man, but in proportion all the way through. His littleness carries no suggestion of the dwarfish. His head is large, but not enough so to make him look topheavy. His hands and feet are of moderate size, well-formed and muscular. He has a chest big enough to breathe in, a waist which carries no adipose luggage. His skin is swarthy, his hair black and straight. A pair of hazel eyes full of life, but comprehensive rather than keen; the wide mouth of an orator or actor, mobile yet firm of lip; the brow of a scholar; a face in general in which the perpendicular lines of strength are accentuated, a manner at once dignified and friendly, a bearing which I should call attentive rather than alert—these are the characteristics of the outward.

His mentality is not so easily characterized. I shall have to try to bring it out for you in a series of rather detached glimpses, as he himself revealed it to me in the course of our conversation.

Our talk ranged over many topics. We had, for instance, been speaking of the extraordinary amount of reading of standard English authors he had done before he was 20 years old, and I asked him whether the familiarity with his mother tongue thus acquired had not been an important element in his various successes. He said: "I think that is true. Ability to express myself effectively in speech has been of great value to me."

NEWTON D. BAKER.

"LOOKING at myself impersonally, I am inclined to think I have a very patient mind. I mean by that a mind which moves slowly, which plods forward instead of dashing or leaping. There is nothing brilliant about it. A brilliant man, it strikes me, is like a thoroughbred horse, good for a race, but afterwards needing to be stabled for a day or two. My mind is like a plow horse. It cannot spurt, but it can go on turning furrow after furrow. That lets me get through a lot of work.

"By a patient mind I also mean a mind which does not leap to altitudes and decisions, but feels its way. And a mind which does not get its back up easily. Opposition does not make my mind bristle. A difference of opinion is not a personal thing with me." — NEWTON D. BAKER.

This led to a brief sketch of his personal history. Mr. Baker was born in 1871, in Martinsburg, W. Va., a community of 8000 persons, wherein his father was the leading physician. He was the second of four sons. At the age of 20, in 1891, he received his degree of Bachelor of Arts from Johns Hopkins University, having completed the four years' course in three years. Followed a year of graduate work in Roman law, comparative jurisprudence and economics, and then his law course, which he took at Washington and Lee University, at Lexington, Va., completing the two years' work in one year.

"That compression," he told me, "was done for family reasons. Money was not plentiful in a country doctor's family, and there were other sons to educate."

Began His Political Career as Secretary to Postmaster-General

AFTER his graduation in 1893, Baker hung out his shingle in Martinsburg to indicate that he was "willing to practice law," as he puts it, and remained in that receptive condition until 1896, the last year of the Cleveland administration, when Postmaster-General Wilson called him to Washington to be his private secretary. "I divided my two cases between the other members of the legal bar," he told me, "and went."

That service ended, he took a trip abroad in 1897, returned to Martinsburg and remained there, still perfectly willing to practice law, until 1898, when he was invited to come to Cleveland, O., as a partner with Foran & McTague, one of the city's leading firms of trial lawyers. He went there, met Tom Johnson and was magnetized by that association, was drawn into local politics and had 14 years of active campaigning there, serving four terms as City Solicitor under Mayor Johnson and two terms as Mayor after his chief was deposed. He declined to run for a third term, and had just resumed his law practice at the beginning of this year when he was called to Washington.

Returning to our topic, I asked him what other qualities besides his ability as speaker he felt indebted for what he had accomplished. He pondered that and said: "Looking at myself impersonally, I am inclined to think I have a very patient mind. I mean by that a mind which moves slowly, which plods forward instead of dashing or leaping. There is nothing brilliant about it. A brilliant man, it strikes me, is like a thoroughbred horse, good for a race, but afterwards needing to be stabled for a day or two. My mind is like a plow horse. It cannot spurt, but it can go on turning furrow after furrow. That lets me get through a lot of work.

"By a patient mind," he went on, "I also mean a mind which does not leap to altitudes and decisions, but feels it way. And a mind which does not get its back up easily. Opposition does not make my mind bristle. A difference of opinion is not a personal thing with me.

Being So Little and Looking So Young Has Helped Him

"AND I think," he said, his dark eyes twinkling, and his wide lips quirking with fun, "it has been a very decided advantage to me to be so little and to look so young. I really mean that," he hastened to add and cited two instances in illustration. One was his argument before the Supreme Court of the United States in the Cleveland traction cases, an argument which attracted the flatteringly favorable comment of the learned Justices. The other was a speech which was one of the outstanding features of the Baltimore convention which nominated President Wilson.

"Neither of these," he continued, "could by any stretching of words be called a great speech. The natural fairmindedness of men was what pulled me through in both cases. I looked so handicapped that my hearers said instinctively, 'Give the boy a chance!'"

Such cool, almost academic self-analysis led me to ask him how life struck him, so to speak—what ambitions it stirred in him.

"I'd like to practice law," he said. "That is my ambition. There is no office position that I care for. But I'd like to practice and practice and practice law, for an indefinite number of years. I love it."

Further talk along that line developed the rather interesting fact that the new Secretary of War is one of those men who seem to have been moved forward by the urgings and propulsion of their friends instead of fighting forward of their own accord in response to an inner impulse. Postmaster-General Wilson all but dragged him from his brieflessness in Martinsburg to get his first taste of Cabinet ways and duties and responsibilities. Martin Foran dragged him to Cleveland to become a trial lawyer. Tom Johnson dragged him into politics. And Woodrow Wilson has just dragged him to the War Department.

The circumstances of the Foran case are unusual enough to partake of the romantic. In 1897, when the young and still younger-looking attorney was returning from his first visit to Europe, he was table mate of the late W. T. Stead and a mild-mannered, retiring English barrister. One day Baker came on deck to find the barrister in a peck of trouble. A stalwart, lawyerish, six-foot Irishman, full of Gaelic fire, had waylaid him and was charging him in his own person with all the wrongs England had ever perpetrated on the distressed country.

"I happened to be rather familiar with the Irish land laws," so Mr. Baker tells it, "and contrived to substitute myself for the barrister in the argument. The upshot of it was that my opponent and I became good friends and spent the rest of the voyage playing chess together. We parted in New York. I went back to Martinsburg, and no word passed between us for two years. Then the man—Martin Foran—wrote me the firm's business had so increased that another partner was required and that he wanted me.

He Explains His Conception of the Place to Which He Has Been Elevated and Admits He Believes That Peace, Not War, Is the Handmaiden of Civilization, but Holds That He Must Perform to the Best of His Ability the Duty That Devolves Upon Him of Putting Our Military Affairs Into the Best of Order.

"I had long felt I should be in a larger community than Martinsburg, and I liked Cleveland, but I knew they wanted a trial lawyer, which I was not. So I went on full of excuses, prepared to thank him and be dismissed in friendliness. Before I could get my first excuse out, Mr. Foran had ushered me into an office and said, 'Here's yours,' and before I caught my breath he had sent some clients in for me to talk with. I stayed in Cleveland and learned to be a trial lawyer."

His enlistment as an active fighter in the Johnson campaign was equally unusual. "Tom" was sick one night and the young lawyer was pressed into service to fill his place at a rally. "Tom's sick," said the man who introduced him: "This is Newton D. Baker, who's going to speak in his place. He's a lawyer. That's all I know about him. Go ahead, boy, and tell them what you know." Baker told them, and so began the activities which led to four terms as Solicitor and legal leader of the anti-traction combine forces and two terms as Mayor.

I asked Mr. Baker how the Mayor of Cleveland's job compared with that of the Secretary of War. He said:

"I love personal relationships. One of the pleasantest things about being Mayor of a city the size of Cleveland is the great number of people with whom it puts one into touch. At the War Department I find a large part of my duties is taken up with seeing people. I am very glad that is so. I like to see people constantly. Of course," he explained, "I don't mean that flocks of casual visitors drop in to see me here. But the business of the department brings many people to me daily."

"Uncertainty and Indirectness Only Failings One Need Fear"

I HAD meant to ask him how the two positions compared in size and difficuty. He was noncommital on that point and I suggested that at least he did not seem appalled by the size of this new task, even though the Mexican situation had given him a baptism of fire for a greeting. He said:

"I am not appalled. No man can hope to escape mistakes. Mistakes are inevitable. I know I shall make some. But the only things one need be really afraid of are insincerities and indirectness. Also, it is well to remember that unfamiliar tasks have a way of looking moutainous. Familiarity reduces their proportions. At present I am working from 8:30 in the morning to midnight to become familiar with mine. That slow mind of mine," he said smilingly, "compels me to put in those long hours."

"What is your idea of the functions of the Secretary of War?"

"The duties," he said, "are largely legal. Almost all the Secretaries have been lawyers." (He cited the names of many, from Stanton down to his predecessor, Garrison.) "Strictly military affairs are not my province. Experts must take care of these things. Legal questions—touching the conflicting rights of State and Federal Governments, the navigability of streams, the proceedings of courts martial—such things comprise the problems I have to settle. I am an executive. Congress has made laws governing my department. It is my duty to see that they are carried out conscientiously."

Such a conception and definition seemed to me reminiscent of Admiral Dewey's naive notion of the ideal attitude of a President, and strangely at odds with Mr. Baker's own constructive record as a municipal official. This led to some talk about the relation of the civilian Secretary to his military subordinates. He continued:

"It is a tradition that the Secretary of War shall always be a civilian. That seems to me wise and this is the reason for it: The army—

The 8-Hour Day for Railroad Men.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Articles have appeared from time to time relative to the eight-hour day for railroad men, and with but few exceptions, contain only such information as one would expect from any railroad manager. Literature has been distributed, threatening other classes of service with a reduction in wages, etc., if the demands were met, and that the train and engine men want an enormous raise in wages, and not an actual eight-hour day.

As I am in engine service in this city, I feel at liberty to say the men do want an eight-hour day and are capable of expressing themselves without the aid of any agent in the form of such literature. Any fair-minded person knows it must be a burden to be on duty 12 hours (30 minutes to eat a cold lunch), let alone "bending the back." Enginemen are on their engines in the morning before the majority of workers rise and are still on them as the crowds are going home.

The public seem to be under the impression an engineman is on one continuous "joy ride." Railroad men have the same desire to be at home or spend a portion of their time as they see fit, as their neighbor, but with the 12-hour day (not including overtime), all this is sacrificed for sleep, that they may again report for duty on time and in condition.

If there is any justice in working these hours, and it is necessary, to make railroading a success, why not get together on the 12-hour day—let's all work them, managers and all—and make it a howling success? The old adage, "What is sauce for the goose, is sauce for the gander," applies equally as well in this case, and I venture to say, if it were "good sauce" the managers would have it.

It seems that with the different classes of labor now enjoying the eight-hour day, and their business on a paying basis, the fact would be well established in the minds of all men that each man can and does earn his living in a period of eight hours. The condition of men at the expiration of 12 hours' service, with knowing they must return for another such day or night with no intervention except that for sleep (the duration of which is a little more than half their day's work), keeps them in a state of discontent, and so long as this exists I fear there will be no peace.

Give the railroad men some consideration—the eight-hour day and what can be called a decent wage—and the greatest of all railway labor troubles will be at an end. With such a struggle for existence, in a land of plenty, the wage-earner is still expected to possess true patriotism and be willing to shoulder a gun when the leaders of such land say go. If the "golden rule" were allowed to decide, there would be little delay and little said.

ANOTHER RAILROADER.

Send Mutt and Jeff to Mexico.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

I am awful scared and I cried because they might send my papa to Mexico. Will you please send Mutt and Jeff there to get Mr. Villa? I think they can do it, don't you? So they won't have to send a million soldiers there.

FROM LITTLE EDDIE.

An Old Soldier's Suggestion.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

I have a suggestion to make, that all voters send a letter to the representative of their district advocating that the Government appropriate 120,000,000 to build a solid rock road from coast to coast, east to west, the Government to organize a pioneer corps from old soldiers, men with families that are dependent on their labor for a livelihood, and can be of help in that way to their country and keep them in practice so that in case of trouble they will be in such a position to take charge of and drill recruits, if nothing more.

Now there are lots of men in the United States who have served from three years up, who are in good bodily health, who would welcome a job like that and be of service where the Government could move troops, guns and supplies without depending on railroads, and quicker.

AN OLD SOLDIER.

Lord's Article on Militarism.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

I have just finished reading James Lord's article regarding the attitude of the women on defense, in the Sunday Post-Dispatch. Such articles are appreciated by me, and I believe that I voice the sentiment of many others in this community and that your circulation will be materially increased if you place your influence with the workers and against preparedness, rather than with the jingoes. Yours for a pure democracy.

THE DISGRACEFUL MAJOR BOOM.

"Anything to get rid of Major," may be a fine slogan for the Governor's vice presidential boom in Missouri, but what will be the effect of it on the Democratic national convention?

When the question is asked, why should Major be nominated for the vice presidency, what will be the answer? Because Missouri wants to get rid of him; because there is no office in Missouri that he can fill; because his administration has been, at least, one of the worst Missouri has had; because his administration is so unpopular that it endangers the State ticket and no one connected with it can be elected to office.

With a candidate of this kind for the vice presidency what a delectable position the Missouri delegation will occupy in the national convention! No wonder Speaker Clark doesn't want to be on the delegation and Senator Stone finds that he will be so busy in Washington he cannot attend the convention.

One question the convention will ask: Would the nomination of Major strengthen the presidential ticket in Missouri? Imagine the answer from Missourians—a thundering chorus of "Noes!"

Can Missourians without a shiver imagine Gov. Major in the presidency? Yet the vice presidency is only one remove, one life's distance from the presidency. What sort of patriotism is it to attempt to place such an incompetent executive next the presidency?

It is unthinkable—a tin-horn politician at the head of the Washington Government! Gov. Major would not be nominated by a vote of Missouri Democrats. He would not be indorsed by Missouri Democratic politicians if they thought he had the slightest chance of winning the nomination.

The movement to indorse Major illustrates the depths of hypocrisy, deceit and detrayal of the public interest, picayune, compromising, personal politics can bring party leaders.

The indorsement of Gov. Major for the vice presidency would disgrace the Missouri Democracy. It would forfeit the respect of honest voters and would create another obstacle to Democratic success in the State.

PROBABLY TRUE.

Two reasons exist for placing unquestioned confidence in the professions of Capt. Hans Tauscher, representative of the Krupps in the United States, to the effect that his firm has positively not been supplying Villa with munitions of war. One is that the Krupps are too busy supplying the gratifyingly active market for munitions in Germany to think of foreign markets as far away as Mexico.

The other is that we ourselves have been furnishing Villa with such ample supplies of guns, cartridges, explosives and other things that he has had no need to buy of the Krupps.

SECURITIES AS CONTRABAND.

More than $10,000,000 worth of the securities of American corporations en route from Continental Europe to this side of the water has been seized as contraband by British vessels and turned over to the prize court. They are, however, only evidences of value. If retained they will do England little good unless she can be assured of the value itself.

Many of them are of such form that, if not restored to us, new certificates can be issued as in other cases when securities are lost or stolen, with proper precautions, of course, to prevent anybody from ever collecting anything on the originals.

Getting rid of securities that are taxable is better than hard swearing in annual returns.

JUSTICE HUGHES' POLITICAL OPINIONS.

The New York Evening Post insists that it is necessary for Justice Hughes to express his opinions about the political issues of the day; that "if he is nominated at Chicago it will not be because of anything which he says or fails to say on such subjects, but because his party turns to him as the best man for the emergency."

That was the attitude assumed by Judge Parker previous to his nomination for President in 1904. The Judge sat on the bench of the Court of Appeals of New York and maintained a judicial dignity that would have deflected a 42-centimeter shell. All attempts to obtain from him a confession of political faith proved unsuccessful. The Democratic national convention nevertheless nominated him "as the best man for the emergency," and the rest of the painful story is fully related in the election returns of 1904.

The Republican party this year is much in the position of the Democratic party 12 years ago. It has no real issue and no real principles. The organization is in the hands of reactionaries and the rank and file are restless. The Republican party is bedeviled by Rooseveltism as the Democratic party was then bedeviled by Bryanism, and while it may be unnecessary for Justice Hughes to have any political opinions before he is nominated, the lack of them will be apparent enough after the convention.

War has played havoc with the old political issues. The country is dealing with new conditions undreamed of even four years ago. Some of the questions growing out of these new conditions will affect the destiny of the republic for 50 years or longer. We can think of nothing more ridiculous than for a great party to nominate a candidate for President whose political opinions are a confidential secret, known only to himself and a few intimate friends.

On the Democratic side there is no doubt or mystery. President Wilson has done his work in the fiercest political light that has beaten down upon any occupant of the White House since Lincoln. He has been subjected to a pitiless publicity and a searching criticism such as few Presidents have ever withstood. There is no uncertainty about his record or his achievements. Men may agree with him or disagree with him; but they know what he has refused to do. They know the principles on which he has acted and they are in no doubt as to the motive behind his deeds. If Justice Hughes is to be President Wilson's opponent the public will insist on knowing as much about him as it knows about his great antagonist. It is true that Justice Hughes cannot with propriety and respect for his high office discuss politics while he remains on the bench of the United States Supreme Court; but if he wishes to be the Republican candidate for President he can resign from the bench and become an avowed aspirant for the nomination. Otherwise he can make it unmistakably clear that he is not the man for this "emergency" and that the convention must seek elsewhere.

"UPLIFT" PHARISEES.

In the Public Question Club's discussion of newspapers William Faversham was cited in support of a severe condemnation of St. Louis dramatic criticism from the standpoint of the "educated minority" and the Drama League "uplifters" of the stage.

When Mr. Faversham was here, however, he gave different testimony; he praised St. Louis dramatic criticism and credited it with an improving standard, but testified to the increasing snobbery and inefficiency of the Drama League. Part of his speech at the Drama League luncheon in his honor was thus quoted in a local newspaper:

> The Drama League was really formed by my wife, Julie Opp and myself, and we had a serious purpose. Perhaps it was to promote the long-haired or highbrow drama. But we find the Drama League has been turned into a social affair, in which an actor is expected to shake hands with 200 young girls, and cut his serious address from 40 minutes to 10 minutes. Frankly, if you Drama Leaguers do not get down to serious business and do things, we will have nothing at all to do with you.

This movement for the betterment of the American drama seems to have been wrecked by the vanity, conceit and pharisaism of self-constituted reformers whose conscious complacency feeds on the perfumed adulation of social butterflies and adolescent school girls. The savor of real life is too strong for their tutored minds and cloistered tastes.

PREPAREDNESS VS. UNPREPAREDNESS.

What will happen to the man who lives unprepared for heaven in the hope that there isn't any hell and finds there is one? What are his feelings?

A country which refuses to prepare for war because it loves peace and thinks war is improbable is like a business man who refuses to prepare for competition because he doesn't like it and thinks he may not meet it. What happens to a business man of this kind?

The similarity between the ostrich which sticks its head in the sand in the presence of danger and the advocate of unpreparedness is peculiarly striking, because the ostrich doesn't use its head and exposes the side that the unprepared man always exposes to the enemy.

THE CENSOR'S SCISSORS.

European papers have a singular appearance these days. Columns, half columns, two or three lines are blank; words only are eliminated by the censor. Thus the Figaro of Feb. 19 has the chief editorial cut out in the very center of the first page, the only part remaining being the signature, "Alfred Capus, Member of the Academie Francaise, Editor in Chief."

On the second page of the same edition there is an article of which the title remains "The Man in Chains (M. Clemenceau);" and the four last lines of the article—the balance is blank.

The closing sentence of the article reads:

> We claimed the right and exercised it to criticise the monarch when we had a monarchy; now that we have made a republic out of the monarchy, we are muzzled.

The Paris Temps has a heading "Sur Mer" with a three-inch article eliminated; another article bears the heading "Un vapeur perdu" (a steamer lost); the article is blank.

While this blanking is quite in vogue in French papers, the Austrian editions are no better, only that entire articles are rarely cut out. In a Bohemian paper, for instance, published in Prague under the heading, "No more Bohemia," there is a statement that the order had reached Bohemia that henceforth German is to be the national language. The paper states that that order must come from (eliminated), as it could not possibly have come from Vienna.

THE GREATEST UNDERGROUND DEPTH.

Considering that the diameter of the earth is 8000 miles, we can only scratch the surface.

One of the Lake Superior copper mines has reached a depth of 4575 feet; the Sperenberg shaft near Berlin is 3810 feet deep; the Schladeloch mine near Merseburg, Germany, has gone down 5528 feet, and the Paruschowitz mine in Silesia had to give up operations after 6009 feet had been reached.

The gigantic ropes can barely carry their own weight after they reach a depth of 6000 feet; and are unable to carry a carriage besides. Moreover, mining entails a turning of diamond or other drills, and no power has been discovered to turn a drill at a greater distance than 6000 feet; and even then several hours are required to give the drills a turning movement.

So far all delvings into the ground have had a commercial objective; but the Austrian Government has promised scientists to allow them to exploit, after the war, the Silesian mines for scientific purposes.

Prof. Hanauer of the University of Breslau is promoting this investigation and has arranged to have "way stations" built along the original shaft, and these can be multiplied ad libitum. Exactly how he intends to meet the temperature conditions has not been disclosed. Practical men hold that 6000 feet is the limit of depth that can be reached in safety.

PREPARE.

THE smell of blood is in the air,
  The crash and boom of shot and shell,
  The hurtling wrath and roar of hell—
Prepare, beware, prepare!

The reeling ships, the ghastly glare,
  The fury of the foe unseen,
  The serpent-darting submarine—
Beware, prepare, beware!

The flaming coasts, the city's flare,
  The tumult of the wharf and street,
  The writhing frenzy of defeat—
Prepare, beware, prepare!

The tramp of hosts, the trumpet's blare,
  The savage rape of fields and farms
  And wives with babies in their arms—
Beware, prepare, beware!

The shriek and wail of wild despair,
  The silence and the sick'ning thud
  Of clods in purple pools of blood—
Prepare, beware, prepare!

A pledge of peace, a subtle snare,
  A scrap of paper torn to shreds,
  To serve the nations' sovereign heads—
Beware, prepare, beware!

Oh, guard our land with God-like care!
  Or, shield her with gigantic guns,
  And matchless ships and martial sons—
Prepare, beware, prepare!

THE ORIGIN OF GRINGO.

A correspondent of Just a Minute writes the following with respect to Gringo, the Mexican name for an American:

"The word Gringo, applied to all Americans by Mexicans, generally in a spirit of hatred, originated in a song that has been sung with great success in the last few years, but one that our grandmothers sang. An old Mexican whom I met on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, some time during the year 1905, told me the story. He had an English wife, and must have been 40 years her senior. He was one of the few old Mexicans that I have ever met who had any education at all, and had the proper idea of Americans in general. As to the song. No song, or very few at least, has lingered in the memory of the American people like 'When You and I Were Young, Maggie,' written way back in the early forties. You can now buy it at the 5 and 10 cent store counters, hear it on the phonograph, and occasionally hear it on the stage, sung by some good ballad singer. The first verse of the song is as follows:

"'I wander'd today to the hill, Maggie, to watch
The creek and the creaking old mill, Maggie, as we used to, long ago—
The Green grove is gone from the hill, Maggie,' etc.

"In the above, the words 'green grove' were corrupted by the Mexicans into the word 'Gringo;' this after hearing our soldiers sing this popular song, as it was in those days, during the invasion of Mexico. Our soldiers during the Spanish-American War loaded transports and fought to the old tunes such as 'Coon, Coon, Coon, I Wish My Color Would Change,' 'There Will Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight,' 'Eli Green's Cake Walk' and others of that date. In all popular songs the catchiest part of the melody is picked up and sung by those who never learn all of it, and so it was in the days of the Mexican War. Hear the song sung once and you will see how the words 'green grove' are brought out above the rest of the song. This song was written by Butterfield, and was recopyrighted in 1910.

THE WEEKLY WAR SUMMARY.

IT has not been a particularly good week for anybody, so far as we have been able to learn; though the French have continued to hold their own pretty well around Verdun. One observes in the dispatches that it is always the Germans who capture guns and men; but, nevertheless, the French keep their line intact, and it looks as if the Kaiser must pretty soon run out of men to hurl against the defense. We have said from the beginning that the chief factor in Germany's preparedness was her deception of everybody with respect to the birthrate in the Fatherland, but even that precaution must soon become futile if the Crown Prince doesn't shortly do better than he has been doing around Verdun.

One hears less and less of the Russians as Spring advances. The Russians are a good deal like the sun—they go south in the Fall, and north in the Spring. They have their equinoxes, and if one followed the analogy it would probably be found that they are back and forth over their southern boundary in about the periodicity with which the sun crosses and recrosses the tropics of Cancer and Capricorn. There are better armies in Europe than that of the Czar, but none anywhere near so close to Nature.

It was tremendously gratifying to learn that the Kaiser is opposed to that unrestrained vontirpitizing which has so prejudiced his country in men's esteem all over the world. The Germans have made the most remarkable fight in history, and it would not take a great deal from this on to rehabilitate them in the world's opinion. The Kaiser seems to have the idea.

Our own war against Villa is still in the marching stage. Don't laugh. Wait. Watch. This is all we ask.

HIRAM.

The following are more excerpts from Hiram's letters to his home folks:

"This morning the street cars have a sign in the front part of the car which says, 'Don't Be Backward About Moving Forward. This Is a Bad Sign.' I thought so, too. They mean that when you get on a car and the seats are all taken you should move up to the front of the car where everybody can get a good look at you, which is against human nature, exceptions excepted. If they don't believe this is the reason nobody wants to move up to the front of the car, let them turn the seats around, so that when you get on the rear end of the car you have everybody in the car staring you in the face.

"I went to a picture show last night. The electric lights on the outside read: 'John Walters in for Life!' After seeing the pictures I decided that he deserves to be.

M. B."

The ominous feature of the Mexican situation is that most of Carranza's Generals have now been with him about six months, which is a good while for Mexican Generals to stick.

The little boy who rushed for his airgun when Villa attacked Columbus fairly typified the spirit of '76 with modern equipment.

HEALTH HINTS.

CONSTANT.—A health journal says: If you feel a disagreeable pressure in the forehead above the eyes, connected with attacks of dizziness and loss of appetite, the cause is simply a disorder of your stomach. This only requires a short hunger cure. If the pain in the forehead is very violent, and accompanied by fever, it is a symptom of something more severe, and you should consult a physician at once. A lasting pain in the head, without dizziness, fever, etc., indicates something wrong in the lungs. If you have frequent pains in the back of your head you should have your liver examined, thereby preventing perhaps a long illness. A stinging, boring pain indicates anemia, while a violent headache in one side of the head is a sure sign of nervous prostration, which may be remedied by absolute rest for several hours in a quiet, dark room. If the pain is located in the top of the head, causing the feeling as if a heavy weight were placed upon the vault of the cranium, we may safely presume that excessive mental exertion is the cause. If the pains appear with short interruptions through all the parts of the head, they are of a rheumatic nature, and due to a "cold."

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

NEW SUNDAY READER.—The lard extracted from bacon rinds and ham rinds may be used in making laundry soap. The Boston Globe has this recipe for hard white laundry soap: Five pounds grease, 1 can potash, 5 cups cold water, ¼ cup household ammonia, ¼ cup kerosene, 2 heaping tablespoons powdered borax, 1 ounce oil of sassafras. Care must be taken in saving the grease. Have 5-pound lard pail and put in only clean grease which has been "tried out." Any pieces of fat meat may be put in oven, and when tried out turn grease into pail. Lamb fat is very good and all kinds may be used if clean and free from water. When pail is full put in oven to melt. When about melted empty can of potash into large earthen dish (large enough to hold the soap), pour over it the 5 cups of cold water and stir occasionally until dissolved and cool. Do not let it get cold or grease will not mix well, and you will not have a smooth soap. Now strain into the dish the melted grease (an old stocking is all right to strain through). Stir all the time you are pouring the grease in. It is best to have some one help you. Next in a cup mix the ammonia, kerosene and borax, and add to the soap, stirring 10 minutes, or until thoroughly mixed. The oil of sassafras is to give the soap a pleasant scent. It is well to get the pans ready while the potash is dissolving. Line them with several thicknesses of newspaper (six or eight), fitting it into the corners. Then line with thick brown paper. When soap is thoroughly mixed pour into pans and set to harden. Before it is too hard cut into pieces the desired size. After once making you will find it is not a difficult task, and the excellent soap is well worth while.

SPRING PAINTING.

STOLTZENBURG.—Old woodwork outside: First coat, 100 pounds pure white lead, 4 to 5 gallons pure raw linseed oil, 1 gallon pure turpentine, 1 pint pure turpentine drier. Second coat, 100 pounds pure white lead, 3½ to 4½ gallons pure raw linseed oil, 1 pint pure turpentine, 1 pint pure turpentine drier. New woodwork, outside: Priming coat, 100 pounds pure white lead, 6 to 7 gallons pure raw linseed oil, 1 gallon pure turpentine, 1½ pints pure turpentine drier. The painter may exercise his discretion in using the larger or smaller quantity of oil according to whether the wood is oil absorbing, as pine, poplar and basswood, or less permeable, as yellow pine, spruce and hemlock. The painter may in rare cases find it advisable to increase quantity of turpentine. Where this is done a corresponding decrease is made in linseed oil. Second coat, 100 pounds pure white lead, 3½ to 4½ gallons pure raw linseed oil, ¼ gallon pure turpentine, 1 pint pure turpentine drier. Third coat, 100 pounds pure white lead, 3½ to 4½ gallons pure raw linseed oil, 1 pint pure turpentine, 1 pint pure turpentine drier. We find these statements: Painters as a rule use too little oil in the outside coats. It is the oil that gives life to paint and holds the pigment. Good wearing exterior work cannot be done with heavy paint. If you are quite sure of your boiled oil it is better than raw oil for exterior painting. The second coat on exterior work should not be applied until at least 48 hours have elapsed. No turpentine should be used in it, only raw oil and plenty of white lead. The finish coat may be mixed zinc white with the white lead, particularly if a white job; the zinc will harden the lead and make it more durable. Some painters prefer two parts boiled oil to one of raw in the finish coat.

U. S. Troops Cross Border to Get Villa

MAY BRING PEACE TO MEXICO.

Indianapolis News: If, as now seems likely, the two Governments have found a common basis for action the result will be altogether good. It would have been unfortunate if Villa had succeeded in his purpose, which was to set the two nations against each other. His raid was as much an attack on the Carranza Government as it was on the American city. That fact is now generally recognized in this country. And many who were the severest critics of the President's Mexican policy are now supporting him, not only in his campaign against Villa, but in his effort to avoid intervention. It may be that out of this new development peace for Mexico may be born.

CARRANZA MUST CO-OPERATE.

Chicago Herald: Now that the balm has been administered Washington should insist that Carranza give assurance that this settles the question and that he and his titular subordinates will co-operate in the effort to exterminate Villa. It might also look a little further in the question of just how far these titular subordinates really recognize the authority of Carranza and to what extent they are inclined to act independently. The clearing up of the attitude of Carranza and his Generals is a prerequisite to knowing exactly what must be done to make the move against Villa effective.

NO CONQUEST INTENDED.

Cleveland Plain Dealer: Intelligent South Americans understand that the United States is not today in Mexico for the purpose of conquest. They know, as the citizens of the United States know, that this republic desires not one foot of Mexican territory or one dollar of Mexican treasure.

So much could have been said a decade ago. Distrust of the United States has not been long dead in South American breasts. It is important that no act be committed and no suggestion made that shall tend to revive jealous antagonisms now happily dead.

Regardless of when we come out of Mexico, we shall withdraw with hands as clean as when we left Cuba. Any other policy would be almost as unpopular in the United States as it would in Mexico and Latin America.

ANOTHER PREPAREDNESS LESSON.

New York Tribune: War, even against a Mexican outlaw chief like Villa, cannot be conducted by writing notes. The practical choice before the President seems, therefore, to be between accepting co-operation from Carranza and letting him do most of the work of catching Villa and calling in some more Pan-American arbitrators who will judiciously syndicate the enterprise by putting a joint price on Villa's head.

It is an unpleasant predicament for real Americans. Yet it may help in exposing the idiocy which blocks the way to the creation of a real first line army equal to national needs. The lesson of Vera Cruz, of Columbus, of our whole humiliating experience with Mexico for the last three years, is unmistakable. It is an unanswerable argument for the creation and maintenance of a minimum standing army of 250,000 men.

A DIFFICULT CAMPAIGN.

Cincinnati Times-Star: The five thousand or more American troops who are to go into Mexico after Villa and his fellow butchers will be as thoroughly equipped as is possible. The regular army is amply prepared for this venture. The men have been on the frontier of Mexico for two or three years and are thoroughly seasoned.

It will not, however, be child's play. It is true that Villa's "army" is a disorganized mob. It knows little of military science or discipline. It is ruled by fear, cruelty and greed. Yet it must not be forgotten that the few thousand men the arch murderer may have at his back have been in service for a long time. They know the terrain, its hiding places and its opportunities for offense and defense. They know where water is to be found. They are well up in a school of warfare which knows neither chivalry or humane considerations.

Against these ruffians will go an army of high spirit and great traditions. As things are measured today, it will probably be a little war. But there will be opportunities for great heroism and for great suffering. Whatever the cost, we may be sure that Uncle Sam will stay on the job until it is thoroughly done.

A TIME TO BE CAREFUL.

New York Evening Post: Our rulers and army commanders ought to proceed on the understanding that we have to deal not only with a punctilious and obstinate Mexican President, but behind him with a people sensitive, proud and militarily vainglorious. They may be preposterous in their attitude from the American point of view, but there their attitude stands, unquestionably a serious element in the problem set us to solve. In accusing the Mexicans, in their pride and ignorance, of shutting their eyes to the facts, we must not shut our own eyes to the facts.

It is distinctly a time for all concerned to walk warily. President Wilson cannot desire to undo in a day all that he has wrought at for three years—namely, the assuring of Mexico that we do not covet her lands and will never be guilty of aggressive attacks upon her; together with the building up of his policy of friendliness and confidence and co-operation for all the American republics. Accordingly, it is certain that he will do everything in his power to make it plain to Mexicans that with the capture of Villa and the extermination of his murderous bands, our arms will at once be withdrawn to our own soil Much will depend upon the discretion and tact of the officers in command of our forces as they press into Mexico. Gen. Pershing has stressed the need of the most careful consideration for the feelings as well as the rights of the population where our troops pass. Truly, it is an "anxious task" which our Government has undertaken; but with good will and good fortune it may be accomplished.

NO WAR; A WOLF HUNT.

Washington Times: Between this country and Mexico there is no war; with Carranza in his senses and wishing like us to exterminate the Villa bandits, there will be no war. It will be a wolf hunt.

In any event we shall not see the conflict of men and hear the crash of arms in colossal collision as the Old World sees and hears them. In Mexico there will never be, by the standards of Europe, a battle. And yet this running to earth of an outlaw calling himself a chieftain of revolutionists may bring to the American people a deep and lasting realization of what the nation might have to face in its supreme obligation to itself and to civilization.

If it take virtually all the military power which we possess to run down, corner and capture a poor Mexican horse thief, without numerous followers, destitute of resources, virtually naked of weapons, deserted by his own people, hunted by his own Government, an almost solitary fugitive on the face of the earth, what must we do to prepare ourselves against the day when a great military Power, perhaps the magnificent conqueror of principalities, kingdoms and empires, might come thundering at our gates to sack our national wealth and to make of our people vassals?

Peace Proposals

New York Globe: Another set of tentative peace terms has been suggested—this time a batch said to have been communicated to Col. House during his recent visit to Berlin. It is said that Germany is now willing to negotiate on the basis of evacuation of Belgium and France and the partition of Servia, Montenegro and Albania between Austria-Hungary and Bulgaria. Under the plan neither side would receive indemnity and Poland would have some sort of autonomy.

A cessation of hostilities on such terms would imply merely a truce during which the present belligerents would get ready to renew the conflict rather than a genuine peace. Nothing would be settled. Germany would throw herself into the work of building a fleet capable of contesting Great Britain's sea supremacy, and Great Britain would devote herself to creating an army rivaling the army of Germany. Russia would set about drilling and arming her unnumbered millions, and France and Italy would further exhaust themselves in military preparations. This country would deem that it had no option, but to enter itself in the same mad race, and other pacific Powers would be under a similar compulsion. Europe and the world would become more than ever an armed camp over against the breaking out of another and even greater war.

Rival militarists can find reasons for supporting the making of an inconclusive peace, for each military Power will think it can make use of the respite to repair its mistakes and get ready in a more effective way; but it is difficult to see how any intelligent pacifist can support such a thing. The state of the world under it would be more intolerable than if there is a straight triumph for either side. Should Germany win and attain to world dominance, comparable to that displayed by ancient Rome, the world, while not free in the old sense, would have the blessing of a Pax Romanus. It is probable our German friends, if possessing the power to rule mankind, would do their work well. On the other hand, should the allies win and a new lease of life be given to the principle of democratic nationalism, it is possible, even probable, that some sort of federated internationalism would be evolved and would keep fretful members of the family of nations in order. But if there is no decision the contest will be renewed in a new and more terrific form. The next time this country could not hope to escape embroilment.

Abraham Lincoln said something profoundly true when he declared, in regard to the ante-bellum conditions in this country, that a house divided against itself could not stand; that this country would become wholly slave or wholly free. Similarly it may be said that the world divided against itself cannot hope for enduring peace. The German theory of imperialism and the theory of democratic natlionalism are incompatible. Irrepressible conflict is on between them. The bugles have sounded that will never call retreat. Many Germans do not realize this even as many in Rome did not realize it when grappling with Carthage in the Punic wars. Nevertheless, the logic of events is inexorable. German imperialism will find no place to stop, even as Roman imperialism found no place to stop, although the party of the Scipios, after the victory over Carthage, definitely tried to commit Rome to a nonexpansionist policy.

The interests of this country are against the negotiating of an inconclusive peace. A clean-cut German victory would be better for us and better for the world. Should New England become New Prussia and the rest of the continent become Greater Germany, this state of affairs would be more bearable than one in which each succeeding generation would be merely food for cannon and the waging of war, as in the dark ages, become the only permanent business of mankind

Alvaro Obregon

New York Sun: The report from Mexico that Gen. Carranza's sun has set and that the coming man in the Constitutional party is Gen. Alvaro Obregon may be the shadow of a coming event. In men's minds there has long been a conviction—we speak of Mexico—that Venustiano Carranza will never be President. Aside from the fact that he is temperamentally unfitted to rule a turbulent country, his deserts are in question. It is true that he set up the standard of revolt in Coahuila and made a respectable figurehead for the revolution, but in the military successes in the field he played no part, and such passivity is fatal in a Mexican hero.

To Francisco Villa the first chief owed his emergence from obscurity at Hermosillo. Villa is now a fugitive, having fallen from his high military estate; but with his sword he carved the first chief's way to capital after capital and even set up governments for him to administer. Villa proving impossible as a political leader, intrigue soon undermined him as a commander, and he went down to defeat before Alvaro Obregon, who had displaced him as Carranza's military chieftain. It was through Obregon's victories that the first chief retained his standing as the statesman of the revolution, expounder of the Constitution and director of diplomatic relations. The first chief remained an imposing figurehead, but his followers knew that the man of the hour was the conqueror of Francisco Villa. Mexicans dearly love a soldier. They will bow down to no one else. They cannot distinguish between a civilian and a military leader in a revolution; that is to say, the man they honor and are ready to obey must be a soldier.

If Francisco Villa had been a man of some education and worth of character he could have set aside the first chief and stepped to the head of affairs. But brave as he was, Villa understood his limitations. Alvaro Obregon has those merits and qualifications which Villa always lacked.

The ranchman who became General of the Carranza forces is a solid, useful, masterful, respectable man of the people. He has studied economics and political history. He has enough savoir faire and breeding for high position. A hero of many battles, there is nothing of the dictator about him. To many Mexicans he is the quiet, strong, honest, resourceful man who could reconcile the factions, compose differences and prove a safe executive. That he is also the choice of the Generals is probably true. It is therefore credible that the Constitutionalists are deserting the first chief and turning to Obregon as savior of the country from the reactionaries. There is no doubt that he is the popular hero, and he holds in the hollow of his hand the fortunes of Venustiano Carranza.

Portugal at War; Brazil May Help

PORTUGAL KEEPS THE FAITH.

New York Herald: Germany's "scrap of paper" doctrine finds no adherence in little Portugal. In the eyes of the Government and people of that land a treaty is something to be lived up to. For more than 500 years Portugal has been bound in closest alliance with Great Britain and has profited from the binding. Viscount de Alte, the Portuguese Minister at Washington, has explained the reason impelling his country to enter the war by the side of her ally. In a word it is simply that Portugal keeps the faith.

The part the forces of this sturdy little nation will play on the Continent may be small, but there will doubtless be a different story to tell in East Africa, where Germany is making a last stand for her colonial empire.

WHY PORTUGAL GOES TO WAR.

New York World: The occasion of Portugal's entering the war has been truly inferred. The statement of the legation in Washington makes the knowledge official that Great Britain called upon her to fulfil her treaty obligations.

One need not go back 500 years for precedents, as the legation does. The two nations have been trade friends more than 200 years, since the Methuen treaty was signed; and since the Napoleonic wars Portugal has been bound to furnish 10,000 troops at Great Britain's demand.

The British Cabinet probably took this long delayed course for complex reasons. In the dearth of merchant shipping, the German ships seized in Portuguese harbors may have been the chief reason. Ten thousand troops would not go far in Western Europe now; but for a consideration Portugal can send 10 times as many, if equipped by British money, and their assistance need not be despised.

What Portugal may gain by war is another matter. The prize may well be financial, since she is heavily burdened in proportion to her means. If the entente wins the war, Portugal may be put on her feet again. In any case, the Government has probably chosen the lesser of two evils.

BRAZIL'S ATTITUDE.

Cleveland Plain-Dealer: Germany's declaration of war against Portugal has had one result not foreseen. It has turned the sympathy of the greatest Latin-American republic strongly to the cause of Germany's enemies.

For the Brazilian affection for the Portuguese fatherland is strong and practical. Wealthy Brazilians go to Maderia and Lisbon to spend their money. The welfare of Portugal is dear to all Brazilians, and the success of Portugal and her allies in the European war is sincerely desired.

Brazil is the only Portuguese country of the Western Hemisphere and it is the only American nation which gained its independence without a bloody revolution. The separation was not violent, and no scars were left. The contrast between Brazil's easy separation from Portugal and the cruel and bitter struggles of the other South American states to throw off the domination of Spain is striking and may be an indication of the difference between the Portuguese and Spanish temperament.

In 1808 John VI, King of Portugal, fled to his Brazilian colony to escape the conquering Napoleon. He was a benefactor and greatly aided in the development of the vast realm. King John made Rio Janeiro the Portuguese capital for 13 years, not returning to Lisbon till 1821. At the time of his departure the sovereign did not restore the former dependent status of Brazil, but left his eldest son as Prince Regent.

The country, however, after 13 years as head of the Portuguese empire, was unwilling to accept even the nominal dependence implied by the rule of a Prince Regent. In 1822, one year after the departure of King John, the Brazilians declared for independence, and the Prince Regent, Dom Pedro, was made Emperor. Pedro gladly relinquished his claim to the Portuguese throne and peacefully assumed the rulership of the greater nation. He abdicated in 1831, and his son, Dom Pedro II, after a prosperous reign of 58 years, was exiled in 1889 by another bloodless revolution, and the Brazilian republic was established.

In this history there is nothing to inspire enmity between the little mother country and the immense daughter, and the Brazilians of today are proud to call themselves Lusitans or Lusitano-Americans.

The effect of the sudden manifestation of Brazilian enthusiasm for the cause of Portugal's allies will probably not be felt in Europe, but it may be unpleasant in certain sections of Brazil. In the Brazilian states of Parana, Santa Catharina and Rio Grande do Sul there are large and important German colonies. German activities in Southern Brazil have, in fact, been viewed with apprehension by some of the more timorous upholders of the Monroe Doctrine. It is possible that the position of these colonists, who have remained Germans and have declined assimilation with the Brazilians, may be rendered somewhat difficult.

On the whole, however, the Brazilian attitude is interesting rather than significant. There is scarcely the remotest possibility that Brazil or any other Latin-American state will be drawn into the European war.

THE METHUEN TREATY.

Louisville Courier-Journal: The Root-Roosevelt school of politics who have shouted that President Wilson was wrong in not fighting to prevent the invasion of Belgium, a country with which the United States had no defensive alliance, have tried to explain away the failure of the Roosevelt administration to stand by the treaty with Korea, which provided that if either America or Korea should be encroached upon by another Power the other party to the treaty would exert itself to prevent the catastrophe. It is pointed out that the treaty was absurd on its face because Korea could not be of any service to America.

A case much more like that in which Korea and America were involved during the incumbency of Col. Roosevelt as President and Mr. Root as Secretary of War is that in which Great Britain and Portugal figure at present.

Under the Methuen treaty, now more than 200 years old, and made when Portugal was a great maritime Power, Great Britain stands pledged to protect Portugal, with her army and navy, in consideration of Portugal's having agreed to perform similar services in Great Britain's behalf. Portugal is hardly more able to help Great Britain than Korea was to aid America. But the obligations of Great Britain under the Methuen treaty are not regarded, on the Continent or in Great Britain, as being canceled because Portugal has become a small, unimportant country since the writing of the treaty, while Great Britain has become what Portugal once was, the first maritime Power of the world.

King Alfonso, because Portugal is virtually under British protection, and because the Portuguese debt is pretty widely distributed among small investors in France, has thought it necessary to decrease his frontier garrisons and assure the entente that he will in no circumstances invade Portugal while Great Britain is engaged in war.

If a treaty were no longer binding in the event of one party to it no longer feeling any need of the services of the other, treaty making would come to an inglorious end,

"SPRING COMES SLOWLY UP THIS WAY —"

"Pirate" Picture Play Shows Miss Dorothy Haydel, Former Social Favorite, Coming Out of a Beautiful Garden—Writes Mother of Exciting Moments During Rehearsals of Play at Sea—Oscar Johnson Musicale Last Thursday Delightful Affair — Profusion of Spring Flowers Used in Decorations.

By Frances Cabanne Scovel.

THE "Pirate" picture play, which has been running all week at one of the towndown picture theaters and will go to another one in the West End today, is particularly interesting, because Miss Dorothy Haydel comes walking out of a beautiful garden right into the very camera. So surprising is it to see a girl so well known socially on the screens that it gives one a start.

It is only for a moment, and she is gone, but she has had time to "register" the fact that she has learned the "game," which is much more difficult than would-be picture actresses think, and leaves a delightful impression.

It takes a long time to get over being "camera-shy," which is the same thing as having stage fright, and Miss Haydel evidently is perfectly unconscious of the camera—that disturbing magnet that draws a beginner's eyes as does a mirror, and spoils the film.

It has been almost a year since Miss Haydel went out to Los Angeles, Cal., armed with a letter to William Christy Cabanne, formerly of St. Louis, now a picture director. He evidently found her good picture material as she has been in innumerable pictures—with Fairbanks, Hopper, and dozens of others—in fact, there scarcely has been a picture for several months that has not had her in one or more scenes. Steadily she has been getting closer to the camera, and not long ago had her first "close-up" picture.

After the pirate picture was made she wrote to her mother, Mrs. Henry Haydel, that it had been "terribly exciting;" that in the midst of the fight between the pirates and the soldiers they found there were not enough soldiers. As the fight and most of the play is staged on two old "brigs" that look like they had been some relation to the Spanish Armada, and which had been bought specially for the picture, it was a dilemma, indeed, as they were away out in San Pedro harbor with none of the hundred or more would-be film stars, who sit around the studios within reach.

So Miss Haydel, who was near the director, suggested the girls taking the soldiers' parts. He said "good idea, get into the uniforms, quick" and they did. So in the big fight Miss Haydel is a soldier. But the action goes so fast one can't pick her out.

One of the pirates who goes off the boom into the sea is Sarpy Cabanne and she wrote that he got three powder burns during the fight, but they were not serious.

Miss Haydel is a picturesque type. She has poise, refinement, a face full of expression and a certain distinction that "registers" well. As a belle in the fashionable set in St. Louis she was known as a lover of out-door sports. She swims, rides, and can do most of the things a picture actress must be able to do to succeed. So perhaps soon she will make a place for herself along with a number of other St. Louisans, men and women, who are bright stars in the reel world.

THE PIRATE AND HIS PRIZE

If Hair's Your Pride Use Herpicide.

BE CAREFUL IN USING SOAP ON YOUR HAIR

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for it is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats the most expensive soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy, and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.—ADV.

Did Shakspeare Have a Love Affair—Is It the Secret of His Sonnets?

Did He Love or Imagine It All—If the Former, Who Was the Woman? Questions Arising Again and Again Are Discussed.

WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE was born on April 23, 1564, and died April 23, 1616, so that the tercentenary of his death, which will have wide observance throughout this country, will be April 23, 1916.

By Clarence Stratton.

Instructor in English at Central High School.

IT appears that every famous literary man had some grand passion to inspire his productions. Dante loved Beatrice, Petrarch adored another man's wife, Laura; Alfred de Musset spent an irregular honeymoon in Venice with the seductive George Sand, Shelley eloped with Mary Wollstonecraft, and then, there are others. Was Shakspeare one of them?

It would be no novelty, certainly, to know that he was, and from many cumulative details, it seems entirely probable. First of all Shakspeare's married life began inauspiciously. He was brought to marriage by friends of Anne Hathaway to save her reputation. This all history and fiction depict as being a bad omen. Even the dramatist in one play warns against such a saddening prelude. In his own case, in addition to the specter of the passionate past sitting at meals with them, there was the reality of an ever increasing annoyance of the present and future—the disparity of ages The woman of 26 is only eight years older than her husband of 18, but the woman of 48 is 20 years older than her young husband of 40.

No More Children.

After the future poet left Stratford he had little in common with his wife. His visits may have been frequent, they likely were short. There were no more children born, and despite all the writer's money and residence the family did not move up to London, as one would expect. When Shakespeare died he left her only a bed, though he had provided for her care through their daughter. These circumstances are not of themselves sufficient to build any fanciful romances upon, but when one considers the actor's calling in all times, its freedom from ordinary social conventions, its air of Bohemian carelessness, and especially in Elizabethan England, its detachment legally from ordinary status, one should not be surprised by the tales of light gallantry which have come down to us. One relates a very early escapade of Shakspeare's; it is too good not to repeat, even if it is not true.

The great actor Burbage had made a tremendous success as Richard III and one fair London lady of the audience was so smitten that she made an appointment with him under the name of that character. Shakspeare overheard her invitation and anticipated his fellow actor. The dame must have been pleased by the substitute, for when Burbage announced himself he was refused admittance with the message from Shakspeare that she should know in English history that "William the Conqueror came before Richard III."

Change of Seven Years.

Besides the taverns, the playhouses, the applause, the audiences, the adulating city wives, there were the court, the nobles, the ladies-in-waiting, the frivolity, the glamour, the entertainments, the gambling, the fine clothes, the horses, the foreigners, the intrigues, the dissipations. At first only frequent glimpses were afforded Shakspeare at court performances, then came intimate association from the patronage and friendship of a youth steeped deep in all royal and aristocratic interests. How thrilling it all must have been to the young actor, who within seven years had passed from fugitive rustic poacher to entertainer for Princes.

In 1594 Shakspeare was just 30—talented, graceful, gentle, genial; known as stage player and dramatist; renowned even among cultured readers and dilletanti of the day as the daring author or two of the most highly colored poems of tragic passion ever written. Chances for him to fall a victim to some Circe's blandishments, or for him to attract some light-of-love were innumerable.

His "Sugared Sonnets."

It was the former. Love stricken, he began to write sonnets. Quite contrary to his treatment of the two long poems, he did not try to have these published. All the members of his wide circle of acquaintances were allowed to read them. One critic spoke in print of his "sugared sonnets among his private friends." A shrewd publisher with an eye to the money value of his name published two of them with no authorization, and finally several years later, when all the personal feeling, application and general understanding had practically disappeared, the entire series of 154 was brought out surreptitiously.

Like many another collection of sonnets, then, and during the nineteenth century, they are love sonnets. But they are different from all others in the startling detail that they do not chronicle a happy love, nor even a regular one, but an extraordinary situation which most poets would hesitate to put into any verse at all unless so deeply affected that the passion could find its only outlet in poetry. The 154 poems, decidedly uneven in quality, some rising to the heights of compressed poetry, others no more than jejune puns on Shakspeare's name, Will, and the will of his mistress, fall easily into two groups, 126 in the first, 26 in the second, with a final pair having no connection whatsoever with the preceding.

"Two Loves I Have."

The poet declared, "Two loves I have of comfort and despair; the better angel is a man right fair, the worser spirit a woman colored ill." Perhaps anticipating the catastrophe the poet urges his friend to marry. Time will pass, he will die, no posterity will survive him, his beauty will be entirely lost to the world unless he leave a son. With all his fame and position now, he is merely mortal; but should he marry young, what joy in knowing his family and name eternalized. Why, without that, the poet's lines alone can immortalize him, and this Shakspeare, confidently asserts his poetry will do, for Shakspeare knew that literature would outlast all other products of his life, and also let it be clearly understood; knew that his own poetry was good.

Noble, generous, beautiful as he must be, this nobleman has the aristocratic vices, he has exercised all his traits, acceded to all his desires; youthful, he is celebrated for his wantonness, till even Shakspeare, actor, dramatist, a "motley to the view," suffers shame in being known as his friend.

These lapses from regularity would never have affected the poet's feelings had not the friend crossed the path of his mistress. What chance could Shakspeare have against the dazzling glamour of the noble? "When woman woos what woman's son will leave her till she have prevailed?" So the poet, deceived by his mistress and his patron, turns to write of her: "To win me soon to hell my female evil tempteth my better angel from my side."

No Imaginary Beauty.

This "woman colored ill" was no imaginary beauty of romance. She was no blonde. Her eyes were black, her hair was raven black, and black her deeds. When she played upon the virginal, Shakespeare envied the white keys kissed by her fingers, and as she set the wires tingling so she could play upon his emotions. Yet she was false to him. "So, now I have confessed that he is thine." She was promiscuous in her loves, or had been so, "my eyes anchored in the bay where all men ride;" because of her "sinful loving," the marriage vow had been broken—whether hers, or his, or other men's is not shown. Though he knew she lied to him, though she was as black as hell, as dark as night, yet he yearns for her still.

This sentiment is described in one of the most charming sonnets of the entire collection. As a busy housewife to capture one of her chickens puts her baby down upon the floor, rushes off, leaving him crying, then returns to wipe his tears and still his sobs, so should his mistress, having pursued the nobleman, return and comfort Will.

So she is false, lying, unworthy, forsworn, black in her deeds, black as hell, dark as night, grounded on sinful loving, slandered, cruel, his female evil.

Shock to Affections.

This extravagant language and frank avowal seem too realistic to be merely imagination when taken with the abrupt and decided change in the kind of play Shakspeare was writing at this same time. The shock to his affections may account for the unworthy nature of the faithless Cressida. It may foreshadow Hamlet's opinion of Ophelia and his insults to her. Another lover who appealed to Shakspeare for help in his own suit with an obdurate mistress was allowed by the seemingly embittered poet to suffer his torments and be laughed at for his pains. There is no question of the direct testimony of the book containing this incident.

The impression left by the expressio

Thrifty Women Always See MILFORD'S Show Windows When Shopping

A Note From Our Manager

Most women of St. Louis are close readers of advertisements in the daily papers. They are not, however, always acquainted with market conditions.

There is no such thing as a "bargain" that is compared with prices of a year ago.

The daily mail of every retailer records advancing prices. Advertising to the contrary is misleading.

W M Stemberg

We carry a big line of conservative styles in Suits, Coats, Dresses, etc., suitable for the woman that requires "extra size"—46 to 54—$19.75 to $35.00.

mselves, the correspondences in the ays, the facts of his married life, the literary conditions of the times—all in-line one to believe the sonnets embody a true story.

Who was this noble friend of Shakspeare? Who was this enchantress?

For long time he was supposed to be the Earl of Pembroke, whose life seemed to fit all the circumstances and allusions in the poems, and who had an affair with a fascinating lady-in-waiting to Queen Elizabeth. This notorious dame of too easy morals was a Mistress Mary Fitton. Mr. George Bernard Shaw accepts these identifications and in his Dark Lady of the Sonnets sends Shakspeare prowling about at night to keep a rendezvous with the maid, instead of whom he meets the Queen herself. This theory was all very well so long as Mary Fitton was considered a brunette, but woe to the supposition, all her portraits show her a decided blonde. She may have been changeable in her affection, but hardly in her complexion. She had many lovers; William Shakspeare was not among them.

The man was in fact the Earl of Southampton, the only patron the poet ever had. His career was more romantic than any woman novelist would dare to invent. Before he was 20 he was dowered with all the wealth, all the graces and all the vices of ambition and desire. The Queen loved him as she loved Essex and Leicester. He danced the most gracefully, dressed the most fashionably, spoke the most charmingly, rode horseback the most daringly, attended the play the most regularly, developed literary associations the most sedulously, of all the young courtiers.

And he loved most ardently, and unfortunately, most successfully. Elizabeth Vernon, cousin to the Earl of Essex, and he were so much discussed that he feared Elizabeth's anger, so he went to the continent to fight Spaniards. But the story-book denouement occurred. He had to return hastily to marry his sweetheart in order to avert a scandal to her, to her family, and to the Court.

Loses Elizabeth's Favor.

All Elizabeth's favor turned to bitter gall, and later, when Essex, likewise in royal disgrace, sought to stir London up to revolt against the Queen, even trying to inflame the populace by a performance of Shakspeare's "Richard II" to justify the deposition of a sovereign, Southampton joined with him. Their dismal failure resulted for Essex in his execution, and for Southampton in a sentence of life imprisonment. After the Queen's death the new King pardoned the noble prisoner, who found an outlet for his restless activities in colonizing schemes for America. In Virginia, Hampton River and Hampton Roads were named after him.

He lived on eight years after Shakspeare's death.

If he was the man of the sonnets, who was the woman? One wonders.

What does her name matter after all? Her tragic influence upon Shakspeare's life is evident enough from these poems. It appeared in other places. The bitterness of his disappointment the dramatist injected into the Trojan Cressida, the most disturbing and otherwise unexplainable woman of all his creations. Considered in any other aspect than this, she is absolutely unworthy of him and his genius; studied in this connection of the sonnets, she is as natural as their very phrases.

Great as the agony of the experience must have been, Shakspeare underwent it first and overcame it subsequently. For it and it alone, perhaps, could have enabled him to delineate the greatest of all his love stories—not the flashing of the passion in youth, not the adulation of worshiping girlhood, not the first flower so easily blighted, but the overmastering abandon of midde age, the love of Cleopatra for which Antony would cast the world away.

The sonnets are easy to understand, the story they depict is affecting—but the questions arise again and again—did Shakspeare actually go through it all? Did he dramatically imagine it as he did other situations? And if the first, who was the woman? But that is the perpetually fascinating mystery.

First Complete Showing of All the New Spring Styles

A NEW Hat From Your OLD

You'll Not Be Able to Tell the Made-Over Hat From a New One

Our blocks are made from some of the most expensive styles shown. We have copied the $35 to $100 models, and our present big style showing represents an enormous expense of time and money.

This idea has revolutionized millinery buying, and instead of throwing away last year's hat we make it over into a fashionable effect suitable for dress, street, or everyday wear.

Women of extreme wealth are having their old hats made new again (the Peckham way), and use them either for several extra hats or the truly "Best."

One of your old shapes made over and then retrimmed will make an expensive style creation at about one-tenth the actual value.

The new, becoming shapes are ready. Come in, try them on, and you will realize just what this offer means to you.

Your oldest hat, no matter what kind or how old, whether hemp, Milan, Panama, or any other straw, cleaned and reblocked, or cleaned, dyed and reblocked at a surprisingly low cost.

We invite your attendance to this first showing. Come in and see the authoritative styles for spring. Bring your old hat with you.

Secretary of War Glad He Is Little, People Expect Less

made up of soldiers—belongs to the common people. The Secretary represents the soldiers. He is here to temper and direct the zeal and ardor of professional soldiers, by holding the viewpoint of the common people. Not," he hastened to add, "that there seems to me to be in the army any militaristic peril to republican institutions. I have not been here long enough to have a basis for generalizations, but the officers I have met are by no means bellicose. They are not spoiling for a fight. Being soldiers, they wish to be good soldiers, ready for war if it should come. That is not 'militarism.' "

In the position of a layman executive, called upon to discriminate between and render final decision on the proposals of professional specialists and experts, Mr. Baker did not seem to see any particular difficulties. "Perhaps," I suggested, "it will give a chance for the exercise of that 'patient mind' you spoke of."

"Put it that way, if you like," he said. "My mind would be open. I should listen to all the evidence and weigh it. If, then, I could not reach a decision which seemed right and wise to me, I should call a council of the best men I could get. That is the way to work out difficulties. That is what we used to do in Cleveland," and he went on to tell me of the annual three days' meeting of the Board of Apportionment, behind locked doors, and the final emergence of the warring and disgruntled members, all "bringing their troubles for father to wash out."

I asked him what he did for fun.

"Play with my babies," he said, and told me of Betty, aged 11; Jack, who was 9 on St. Patrick's day, and Peggy, the baby, who is 4, and dreads giving up her toys no wthat she is a woman. As for sports: "I never in my life consciously took any exercise," he said. "But," he added seriously, "I have a genuine interest in sport. It furnishes an outlet for energy that might otherwise burst out in harmful ways. But I've simply never had any time for it, just as I've never had time to realize my one dear ambition—to practice law."

About "preparedness" he felt obliged to decline to say a word, and I reminded him of an interview in which he was freely quoted as saying that he was "for peace at almost any price."

"So I am," he answered stoutly. "because peace seems to me the reasonable thing. I do not say that war is always avoidable. It seems to come sometimes as earthquakes come—a natural cataclysm. The French Revolution, I think, was such a war. But war is always regrettable. Peace is what spells progress. We have to advance step by step. I do not think we can hope to force advancement by violence. And I believe that sometimes we shall have a court of nations, and no more wars. Was it Lowell said: "The telegraph gave the world a nervous system?" As our world gets better co-ordinated by intercommunication, we shall have fewer of the misunderstandings which cause wars."

Constantly, as we talked, alike in his domicile and in his office, the new Secretary's unpretentious pipe was in his mouth. Constantly his knees crooked and his feet curled up to comfortable positions on radiator top and desk top. Though there was always a certain dignity about him, we might have been two undergraduates chatting together. His attitude was not suggestive of lounging, or of affected carelessness. It was, I thought, the bodily ease which is apt to reflect outwardly the mental states of unself-consciousness and serene self-confidence.

The new Secretary of War, then, mentally, is a somewhat enigmatic person, particularly if one keeps in mind that figure of speech about 38-caliber revolvers and seacoast guns. As I have said, nature made a neat job of his body on a small scale and this tendency seems to extend beneath his skin. His language is neat. I do not remember that he used a single slang phrase during our several hours of talk. His thoughts seem to be all neatly arranged for instant reference and he sets them forth in neat, concise, simple words. I have said, too, that he gives the impression of attentiveness rather than alertness, of comprehensiveness rather than keenness. Personal ambition does not seem to have any power to prick him very sharply, and if there is a turmoil of pent force raging inside him it is well concealed.

Those things on one side. On the other—that unpretentious confidence in himself and the man's record. His experience of public affairs has not been wide—or, better, it has not been gained in a very wide field. He hasn't been called on to do work of maximum importance, or handle very big affairs. But whatever he has to do he has done, shall one say, with neatness and dispatch. As City Solicitor of Cleveland, in the traction matters, he fought the mobilized legal big guns of Ohio to a standstill. As Mayor he forced the people to retain him until he had done what he set out to do.

To be Secretary of War just now—to be lifted at one step from local into national prominence, at a critical moment like the present—is a far more searching test of his capacities than any he has yet undergone.

Son's Cold Better in 15 Minutes After Using "Outside" Treatment

Kossuth Avenue Lady Finds New External Treatment Better Than Internal Medicine.

Intelligent people everywhere, especially mothers with small children, have been looking for some way to treat croup and cold troubles without the necessity of using strong internal medicines. This stomach dosing is especially injurious to the delicate stomachs of children. Vick's "Vap-O-Rub" is a salve invented by a North Carolina Druggist. You just rub it over the throat and chest, and cover with a warm flannel cloth. Leave the bed covering loose around the neck so that the soothing antiseptic vapors, released by the body warmth, can be inhaled with each breath. In addition Vick's is absorbed through the skin, taking out the tightness and soreness. Last winter, in order to introduce this preparation in St. Louis, we arranged for the local druggists to give away a number of jars free. A Kossuth Avenue lady, whose name we withhold by request, received one of these complimentary jars from John J. Mueller, Druggist, and writes us as follows: "I have tried your remedy on my son for a very bad cold. I rubbed it in well, and then covered with a flannel. He was better in about fifteen minutes. The cough stopped in about five hours. I washed it off with warm water and tried it again in the morning. His chest did not pain him any more and the cough had stopped."

Vick's can be had from any druggist in three sizes, 25c, 50c and $1.00. You will find it excellent for any form of cold trouble, from head colds, catarrh or asthma, down to bronchitis, sore throat or incipient pneumonia. The Genuine has VAPORUB —ADV.

LARNED'S HISTORY OF WORLD STRETCHES OVER 70 CENTURIES

The life of mankind, stretching over 70 centuries, is treated like a great drama in Larned's History of the World. Joseph Nelson Larned, the historian, divides it into six acts or epochs, the chapters being the scenes. Before the curtain rises on each act the chief actors are introduced in a prologue. The biographies of the mighty actors whose deeds and words have made or marred the destiny of nations are fascinatingly sketched and the reader beholds them in their true relation to world history. In his treatment of the events and happenings of history they are placed in logical relation and the general plan and progress of civilization is made apparent to the reader.

The history, published by the World Syndicate Co., Inc., New York, can be had at the Post-Dispatch office for $1.98, provided a coupon printed in their advertsement in another column is presented.

NEW BOOKS BY PROF. HELLER

One Is a Translation of an Old German Comedy.

Two books by Prof. Otto Heller of the department of German at Washington University will be issued soon.

One is an edition for school and college use of Theodor Storm's "In St. Judgen;" the other, a translation into English of Lessing's "Minna von Bornhelm." While the latter play has been one of the leading German comedies for nearly 150 years, it is said, there has never been an adequate English translation of it. The play will have its first production on an American stage this fall.

Dr. Loeb's Solution of Missouri's Tax Problems

of the administrative machinery provided. Property is assessed for taxation by an assessor elected in each county. In many cases the assessor has had no experience in methods of valuing property and thus through lack of knowledge fails to enforce the law. In most cases, however, the local assessor consciously keeps down the assessment so that his constituents will not be required to pay as large a proportion of the State tax.

As the State tax is so small, it would seem that this motive would not be a strong one, but experience proves the contrary. Some assessors are influenced by the knowledge of low assessments in neighboring counties and the great majority follow the practices and traditions of their predecessors in office.

The assessor is not alone to blame. His assessment lists are passed upon by the County Board of Equalization, made up of Judges of the County Court, the County Surveyor and Assessor. These are all locally elected officials and the subject to the same influences as the assessor. In most cases, if the assessor increase assessment to the true value they would be reduced by the County Board of Equalization. In no case do these board underftake to enforec the law requiring property to be assessed at its true value.

Finally, the assessments in each county as equalized by the County Boards of Equalization must be passed upon by the State Board of Equalization consisting of the Governor, State Auditor, State Treasurer, Secretary of State and Attorney-General. This body, however, has not been able to secure the enforcement of the law requiring assessments to be at full value. In the first place, the members are busy with the duties of their respective offices and do not have sufficient time to devote to the difficult problem of State equalization of values. They do not have sufficient knowledge of the conditions affecting values throughout the State and are unprovided with adequate means for securing the necessary information. Finally, under a decision of the Supreme Court, the State Board of Equalization cannot increase or diminish the assessment of individuals or specific pieces of property, but is limited to changes in the aggregate value of property or of classes of property within a county.

The experience of many other states has shown in order to secure assessments at full value, it is necessary to have a State Tax Commission consisting of men who have special knowledge of the problems of taxation and assessment, and who devote their entire time to the duties of their office.

What Tax Commission Should Do.

The Tax Commission should have general supervision over the administration of all laws for the assesment and collection of taxes, with power of compelling the performance of legal duty by local tax officials. It should have full powers to investigate local assessments, and to make reappraisements by its own appraisers. It should have authority to hold State and district meetings of local assessors for the purpose of instruction in methods of assessment

The establishment in Missouri of a State Tax Commission with adequate powers would result at once in the enforcement of the law regarding assessments at full value, and would thus relieve the critical situation created by the existing inadequacy of State revenues. In other states the establishment of state tax commissions has resulted in immediate relief to the state revenues. It may be urged that the assessment of property at full value would produce more revenue than is needed by state and local governments. In such event the Legislature could either lower the rates of taxation or could provide for levying the taxes upon only a certain per cent of the assessed valuation. At present, however, no alternative exists for the existing condition of inadequacy of state revenues.

It was pointed out at the beginning of this discussion that in addition to capacity of produce adequate revenue a system of taxation must provide an equitable basis for apportioning the burden of taxation. The failure of the Missouri system in meeting this latter requirement is equally as great as in the matter of producing adequate revenue. Gross inequalities exist in the assessment of different counties, of different classes of property in the same county, and of diferent individuals owning property of the same kind.

The system of taxation is known as the general property tax under which all property is subject to taxation for State and local purposes. Most people assume that such a system is equitable since a man's property is a good basis for estimating his ability to pay taxes. This was true when the system was first introduced in Missouri early in the history of the State. At that time conditions were quite primitive, all property was tangible, its value was easy to determine and great inequalities did not arise.

System Fails Under Property Changes

As the State grew in wealth and population the situation became much more complex. Property values increased, new forms of property appeared, such as stocks, bonds, etc., and the problem of assessment became increasingly difficult. The local county assessors without training were unable to meet the new situation. Their desire to keep down the assessments of their counties increased the differences with the ultimate result that the constitutional rule of uniformity in taxation was disregarded.

Attention has been called to this deplorable situation by successive Governors and State Auditors. Two State Tax Commissions have been appointed to investigate and make recommendations regarding the tax situation in this State. The reports of both of these commissions as well as the testimony of other officials agree in pointing out glaring inequalities in the assessment of property for taxation. The following paragraphs taken from the report of the Tax Commission of 1903 show the situation existing at that time:

"Reports were received from 38 coun-

Dr. Loeb's Solution of Missouri's Tax Problems

of the administrative machinery provided. Property is assessed for taxation by an assessor elected in each county. In many cases the assessor has had no experience in methods of valuing property and thus through lack of knowledge fails to enforce the law. In most cases, however, the local assessor consciously keeps down the assessment so that his constituents will not be required to pay as large a proportion of the State tax.

As the State tax is so small, it would seem that this motive would not be a strong one, but experience proves the contrary. Some assessors are influenced by the knowledge of low assessments in neighboring counties and the great majority follow the practices and traditions of their predecessors in office.

The assessor is not alone to blame. His assessment lists are passed upon by the County Board of Equalization, made up of Judges of the County Court, the County Surveyor and Assessor. These are all locally elected officials and the subject to the same influences as the assessor. In most cases, if the assessor increase assessment to the true value they would be reduced by the County Board of Equalization. In no case do these board underftake to enforec the law requiring property to be assessed at its true value.

Finally, the assessments in each county as equalized by the County Boards of Equalization must be passed upon by the State Board of Equalization consisting of the Governor, State Auditor, State Treasurer, Secretary of State and Attorney-General. This body, however, has not been able to secure the enforcement of the law requiring assessments to be at full value. In the first place, the members are busy with the duties of their respective offices and do not have sufficient time to devote to the difficult problem of State equalization of values. They do not have sufficient knowledge of the conditions affecting values throughout the State and are unprovided with adequate means for securing the necessary information. Finally, under a decision of the Supreme Court, the State Board of Equalization cannot increase or diminish the assessment of individuals or specific pieces of property, but is limited to changes in the aggregate value of property or of classes of property within a county.

The experience of many other states has shown in order to secure assessments at full value, it is necessary to have a State Tax Commission consisting of men who have special knowledge of the problems of taxation and assessment, and who devote their entire time to the duties of their office.

What Tax Commission Should Do.

The Tax Commission should have general supervision over the administration of all laws for the assesment and collection of taxes, with power of compelling the performance of legal duty by local tax officials. It should have full powers to investigate local assessments, and to make reappraisements by its own appraisers. It should have authority to hold State and district meetings of local assessors for the purpose of instruction in methods of assessment

The establishment in Missouri of a State Tax Commission with adequate powers would result at once in the enforcement of the law regarding assessments at full value, and would thus relieve the critical situation created by the existing inadequacy of State revenues. In other states the establishment of state tax commissions has resulted in immediate relief to the state revenues. It may be urged that the assessment of property at full value would produce more revenue than is needed by state and local governments. In such event the Legislature could either lower the rates of taxation or could provide for levying the taxes upon only a certain per cent of the assessed valuation. At present, however, no alternative exists for the existing condition of inadequacy of state revenues.

It was pointed out at the beginning of this discussion that in addition to capacity of produce adequate revenue a system of taxation must provide an equitable basis for apportioning the burden of taxation. The failure of the Missouri system in meeting this latter requirement is equally as great as in the matter of producing adequate revenue. Gross inequalities exist in the assessment of different counties, of different classes of property in the same county, and of diferent individuals owning property of the same kind.

The system of taxation is known as the general property tax under which all property is subject to taxation for State and local purposes. Most people assume that such a system is equitable since a man's property is a good basis for estimating his ability to pay taxes. This was true when the system was first introduced in Missouri early in the history of the State. At that time conditions were quite primitive, all property was tangible, its value was easy to determine and great inequalities did not arise.

System Fails Under Property Changes

As the State grew in wealth and population the situation became much more complex. Property values increased, new forms of property appeared, such as stocks, bonds, etc., and the problem of assessment became increasingly difficult. The local county assessors without training were unable to meet the new situation. Their desire to keep down the assessments of their counties increased the differences with the ultimate result that the constitutional rule of uniformity in taxation was disregarded.

Attention has been called to this deplorable situation by successive Governors and State Auditors. Two State Tax Commissions have been appointed to investigate and make recommendations regarding the tax situation in this State. The reports of both of these commissions as well as the testimony of other officials agree in pointing out glaring inequalities in the assessment of property for taxation. The following paragraphs taken from the report of the Tax Commission of 1908 show the situation existing at that time:

"Reports were received from 98 counties and the city of St. Louis. These [illegible] indeed startling if some of the facts stated therein had not been previously known. They show a condition of affairs that should no longer be permitted to continue.

"It is within the bounds of truth to say that no two counties in the State have the same rule for the assessment of all classes of property, and, generally speaking, there is absolutely no uniformity as to the proportion of the actual cash value taken as the basis for the assessed value.

"Some counties value real estate, so these reports show, as low as 30 per cent of its selling price, while others have a 90 per cent basis. Some assess real estate at 33 1-3 per cent, money and credits at 100 per cent, and tangible personal property at 50 per cent.

"There is an absolute want of equality in taxation according to the replies received from the officers, and the absence of any uniform rule throughout the State for assessing property.

"It results from this condition that some counties contribute more than their part to the State's expenditures, while others are charged with less than their share.

Discriminations Against Cities.

As the recommendations of the Tax Commission were not carried out, the situation has not improved, but has become worse since 1908. As a rule, property located in a city is assessed higher than that located in rural districts. This is due to the fact that the constitutional limitations on the rate of city taxes makes it necessary to increase the assessments in order to secure sufficient revenue for city purposes. As the assessment is the same for all taxation, it results that property in cities pay taxes on a higher assessment not only for the city, but also for State, county and school purposes.

The evidence makes it clear that there is great lack of uniformity in the assessment of property for taxation. While the rate of taxation is the same for all property variations in the rate of assessed value to real value mean differences in the proportionate share of taxes paid. Of two persons each owning property of the actual value of $1000, the one whose property is assessed at 60 per cent of its real value will pay three times as much in taxes as the one whose property is assessed on a 20 per cent basis. This illustrates the situation existing within many counties and as among the several cities and counties of the State. It leads to a highly inequitable distribution of the burden of taxation which was not contemplated by the constitution or laws of the State and offends our sense of right and justice.

Most American states have had the general property tax system and have experienced similar results to those which have occurred in Missouri. Many of these states have corrected the evils of inequality of assessment by the establishment of permanent state tax commissions with general supervision over the entire system of assessment of property for taxation. The composition and functions of a state tax commission have been discussed. Its relation to the local assessors and its power to order re-assessment by its own appraisers would bring about uniformity of assessments throughout the State. It is practically the only method by which equality of taxation can be secured under a general property tax system.

Property That Escapes Tax Burdens.

Lack of uniformity in taxation under present conditions arises not only from inequality in assessments, but also from the fact that certain kinds of property entirely escape the Assessor, and are not assessed for taxation. Land, houses, machinery, horses, cattle, merchandise, furniture, etc., are visible, cannot be concealed and as a rule are assessed for taxes.

On the other hand notes, bonds and stocks are known as intangible property which may be hidden or sent out of the State and thus escape assessment and taxation. This has always been true, but in the early history of the general property tax the amount of this class of property was so small that its evasion of taxation was not of material consequence. Today, however, the situation is quite different as the actual value of intangible property constitutes an enormous aggregate, the greater part of which entirely escapes assessment.

Many students of taxation believe that intangible personal property should not be subject to the general property tax. Notes, bonds and stocks are merely evidence of interests in property which itself is subject to taxation. Hence it is argued that the taxation of this intangible property will cause double taxation of the same property.

It is also claimed that the taxation of notes and bonds will cause an equivalent rise in the rate of interest as money will leave the State unless it can receive a return as high as in other states. But an increase in the rate of interest means that the burden of the tax falls upon the borrower though the tax may be collected from the lender. The people, however, have not been willing to exempt intangible property from taxation. In many states stringent laws have been passed for enforcing the taxation of such property. While temporarily increasing the assessment of intangible property the ultimate result has been a failure in every case.

It is easy to understand this failure. In many cases the interest on notes and bonds does not exceed 5 per cent. The total tax rate for State and local purposes ranges from 2½ to 3½ per cent. A tax rate of 2½ per cent upon a note or bond for $1000 which bears 5 per cent interest would amount to $25, or one-half of the income. If we assume that the note is assessed at only one-half of its actual value the tax would amount to 25 per cent of the income from the note, which is an intolerable burden and far in excess of the burden of such tax upon the income from other property. The owner of the note or bond will either take his property out of the State or will insist upon a higher rate of interest.

Securing the Tax on Mortgages.

Some states have recognized the logic of the situation by classifying property for taxation. Real estate and tangible personal property are placed in one class and intangible personal property in the other. While the former are subject to the general property tax, the latter is exempt from that but subject to a special tax in lieu of all other taxes. In the case of notes and bonds secured by mortgages, the tax is collected at the time the mortgage is recorded so that there is no chance to escape the tax. Stocks and other intangible property not secured by mortgage are exempt from the general property tax provided they are publicly recorded and pay a recording fee of the same amount as the recording tax on mortgages. The recording tax is usually one-half of 1 per cent and the owners of stocks are willing to pay the fee in order to escape the possibility of becoming subject to the general property tax.

Mr. F. N. Judson, in a recent letter to the Post-Dispatch, has pointed out the way in which this system of taxing intangible property may be introduced in Missouri. In the states which have adopted this method it has been found that the amount of revenue secured from intangible property has been enormously increased without resulting in any rise of interest rates. The introduction of a plan of this nature in Missouri would not only relieve the existing serious financial situation, but would bring about a much more equitable system. At present notes, bonds and stocks are largely escaping taxation because it is impossible to enforce the existing law. It would be much better to substitute the above method of taxation for such property as it will be effectively administered, the property will not be able to evade the tax and the revenues of the State will be increased.

Other features of our system of taxation are open to criticism, but these which have been discussed are of the most vital importance. The establishment of a State Tax Commission will do away with the inequitable and unjustifiable inequality in assessments throughout the State. The people of Missouri do not believe in inequality in taxation. They do not think one man's property should be assessed at a higher rate than that of another, nor that property in one county should bear a heavier burden of State taxation than that which obtain in another county. They will support any plan which will remove these evils and lead to equal assessments in county and State. A State Tax Commission will not only accomplish this result, but will, by an enforcement of the law regarding assessments, increase the general revenue of the State so that it will be adequate for the necessary support of the departments of State government and State institutions.

HOW GERMANY EXPECTS TO CARRY AND TO REPAY HER IMMENSE WAR DEBT

Profits From New Monopolies, Which Government Will Take Over When Peace Comes, Will Furnish Funds, Says Social Democratic Leader in Reichstag.

By GILBERT HIRSCH.

A Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

BERLIN, Feb. 10.

The question of how Germany will raise the enormous sums she will need after the war to pay the interest on her war loan, and ultimately the principal, is one of the livest issues in Germany today. Like the problem of what peace conditions Germany shall contend for, it does not get much public airing. But the third loan, large as it was, will not last beyond the end of the winter. A fourth loan, perhaps a fifth, will have to be raised, and ultimately paid off. How will they be paid? Other nations may prefer shoving such unpleasant questions off into that indefinite limbo—"after the war is over." But the Germans consider it safer to cross their bridges—in imagination—before they come to them; and the successes which their detailed preparations have won them in this war have strengthened them in this national habit.

Everyone agrees that, whoever loses through the Government's necessity of raising money, one class of people will be the gainers—the Social Democrats. After the way they have stood by the German Government in the present war, they can no longer be, or pretend to be, a revolutionary party. Their tactics cannot be obstructionist. They are no longer a great conspiracy against the State. They have become one of the strongest of the many parties that compose the State. But the Government's desire for their active co-operation is likely to give them more power in the future than the Government's fear of their opposition did in the past.

New Monopolies to Pay Debt.

I put the problem of Germany's income after the war to one of the leaders of the Social Democrats in the Reichstag, Dr. Albert Suedekum. To my surprise, the prospect of heavy income and inheritance taxes did not arouse any enthusiasm on his part. Direct taxation, he said, could raise only a small part of the sum which will be needed. And too heavy a tax would defeat its own end by crippling industry. Germany is today, in fact, not a Socialist, but a capitalist state. The Socialists deplore this, but—they recognize the truth. The motive power of capitalism is not the love of service, but self-interest. To put a 50 per cent tax on incomes and inheritances would cripple that motive power.

According to Suedekum the money will be raised, not to any large extent by taxation, but by profits from new monopolies taken over by the Government after the war. Practically the world's entire supply of potash is within the borders of Germany, as the planters of our own Southern States have been made to feel—somewhat acutely. So potash is a natural Government monopoly. Coal, in which Germany is extraordinarily rich, will also be a Government monopoly, according to Suedekum, and electricity will be another.

Naturally, I asked Dr. Suedekum how the present owners were to be compensated. He explained that in the case of electricity they would remain in possession. The state was going to step into the shoes, not of owner or manufacturer, but of the retailer. That "middleman's profit," against which the Socialists have always protested as a holdup of the community by the individual, is, in this way, to be turned back to the community. His estimate is that a hundred million marks a year can come back to the people—since electricity will be put into every town and village at a low cost.

There was a time when the German Socialists objected to all Gevernment monopolies, in the interests of the workingmen employed. They declared that the disadvantages that workmen are under in dealing with an employer are increasing tenfold when that employer is the state; and that the state could control the votes of its employes. But this, said Dr. Suedekum, was true only of Government monopolies on a small scale. The more extended they become the more able will the workers be, through their political organizations, to control them.

Universal Suffrage in Prospect.

He believes that the position of the Social Democrats will be much stronger after the war than it was before. And as evidence of this, he cites the amendments which have been promised in the Prussian electoral system. This system is notoriously arbitrary and undemocratic; the Socialists have fought it for years, but without effect. They have now received assurances that, as soon as the war is over, a system of practically universal suffrage will be introduced.

"You in America will be glad to hear of this," he said. "For I see by your papers that you are much worried over eur backward condition. But why aren't you just as concerned over reactionary England? Don't you know that they haven't universal suffrage there either; that there is not only a money qualification, but an "independent householder' qualification; so that nearly one-thirnd of the male population of democratic England is kept from the ballot?"

A man of independent income by inheritance, Dr. Suedekum is not merely a member of the Reichstag, but an officer in the German army. A man of 44, well built and well tailored, who would be remarked anywhere as a "man of the world," his appearance is all the more striking because of his white hair and mustache. In 1895, after his military service in the Alexander Grenadier Guards, he began to write for the Berlin Vorwaerts, and since that time he has devoted himself exclusively to Socialism. He was a student at three German universities, and got his degree of ph. D. in political economy. He has written books on "The Housing Problem in Great Cities," and on Darwin and Malthus, and has edited a "Communal Year Book."

Socialist an Army Officer.

An officer's sword hanging up in the hallway of a Social Democrat's house, as if it belonged there, was a thing that, before this war, I should have believed impossible. And when the very small boy in the Socialist red apron who solemnly received me yesterday in the center of a very big hall assured me that it belonged to his father, it raised afresh the question which I had come all the way out to the suburb of Zehlendorf to have answered:

How do the Socialists of Germany reconcile their support of the Government in this war with their Socialist principles and with their former attacks on militarism?

It was by no means the first time Dr. Suedekum had heard that question. It had been shouted at him in no friendly tones by the Socialists among the allies, ever since the war began. In the writings of the French and English Socialists he has shared with the German Emperor the distinction of being stigmatized as "the man who brought on the war." They insisted that Germany's fighting strength would have been crippled had the German Social Democrats resisted the Government at the outbreak of the war. And he does not deny this. He himself enlisted as a volunteer, and took part in the hot fighting on the Lorette Heights during Joffre's offensive of last spring.

The Social Democrats of Germany have, according to Dr. Suedekum, been as loyal to their principles in international as in national affairs. They had expressly declared, years before the present war broke out, that they could not promise not to fight until France had broken its "bondage" to Russia—for, they contended, the lending of large sums of money by the French to Russia amounted to that, from the Sacialist point of view. The Russians borrowed that money for the purpose (which they did not attempt to conceal) of building strategic railways to the German border. If the French Socialists permitted France to be put in a position where, to secure the loans made by French capitalists, she would have to help Russia make war on Germany, then the French Socialists were helping bring on a "capitalist war," and could hardly—so said Dr. Suedekum expect the German Socialists to permit their country to be delivered into the hands of this manifestation of capitalism on an interna-

MOTHER! LOOK AT YOUR CHILD'S TONGUE

Give "California Syrup of Figs" If Cross, Feverish, Sick, Bilious, Constipated—They love it

Watch Children! Guard Against Colds, Grippe, Sore Throat and Sickness by Keeping Liver and Bowels Free from Poisons

A laxative today saves a sick child tomorrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to consider their own health, consequently their bowels become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish; stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, or your child is listless, cross, feverish, breath bad, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has the grippe or a sore throat or any other children's ailment, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," then don't worry, because it is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation poison, bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleansing" is ofttimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. See that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Don't merely ask for Syrup of Figs, but ask for "California Syrup of Figs." Remember, "California."—ADV.

tional scale. That would be a stupid attempt to keep up the semblance of "solidarity among the workers of the world" after the substance had disappeared.

Franco-Russian Pact's Influence.

"I remember," he said, "that in 1907, at the international Socialist congress at Stuttgart, Herve made a stirring speech, telling the German Socialists that if war broke out between the two countries, the German Socialists ought to refuse to fight, ought to do everything they could to cripple the country's military organization and even resort to 'sabotage.' We answered: 'If you will defeat the French loans to Russia, we will agree to your proposal.' But they did not defeat them. They did not even wage a campaign against them. The Franco-Russia alliance was peculiarly a capitalistic alliance. If the French Socialists had combated it, and if France and Germany could have come together then, as true interests dictated, the peace of Europe would have been assured. That combination would have been too powerful for any nation to attack. But with France an ally of Russia"—"Russia!" he broke off. "We don't hear much about Russia's part in this war from your American papers. You in America don't know what it means to have a nation like that at your door. No one west of the Elbe can understand Russia. The lust for power and expansion that is in that people"——

I interrupted him and told him that in America we had learned to make a distinction between the Russian people, whom we think well of, and the bureaucracy.

His reply was that at bottom no distinction could be made—that Germans who had lived for years in Russia and done business there had told him that the peasant's greed for land was identical with the national greed.

"In the past 100 years, while the territory of Germany has increased hardly at all, Russia has increased at a rate which has been estimated as averaging 100 square miles a day! Most of that expansion, it is true, was on the Asiatic side; but now she thought it was her opportunity to expand westward. As long as France strengthened the arm of a Power like that, how could the French Socialists expect us to throw down our arms?

"It would have been madness. There is no nation in the world that has been in so dangerous a position as Germany—surrounded by enemies and by other states whose friendship could never be counted on, cut off from the open sea. We Social Democrats have always been in favor of restricting armaments. But we have always recognized that in the existing state of affairs in Europe disarmament would be suicide."

'French Would Have Betrayed Us.'

I was forced to drop the charge that the Social Democrats of Germany had gone back on their past principles. For I now remembered that Bebel himself, most prominent and uncompromising of Social Democratic leaders, had, shortly before his death, said that if it came to a war between Germany and Russia, he would himself, old as he was, shoulder a gun and march out in defense of the working men of Germany.

Dr. Sudekum next proceeded to accuse his accusers.

The French Socialists gave us very definite proof," he said, "that if we had relied on their loyalty to the international proletariat, we would have been betrayed. On the day that the first war appropriation was passed by the Reichstag, the French papers had it that the German Social Democratic party had come out solidly against it; that Liebknecht and a number of others had been shot and most of the rest of us put in prison. As you know, not a word of all that was true. But the French Socialists believed it. And believing it, they nevertheless lined up solidly behind their Government in making war on us."

But Dr. Sudekum's heaviest charge against his French "comrades" is that they have permitted the murder of their leader, Jean Juares, to go, not merely unavenged, but uninvestigated. Of the French Socialist leaders, Juares was the one who was most strongly in favor of preserving friendly relations with Germany, and who had won so solid a position, not only inside his own party, but among all members of the French Chamber of Deputies. His opposition to France taking sides with Russia in a war against Germany would have been very powerful. And the fact that his assassination by a fanatical young French Nationalist took place in one of those tense days at the end of July, 1914, when the fate of Europe hung in the balance, left no doubt in Suedekum's mind, at any rate, that the assassination was a political rather than merely a criminal act.

Dr. Suedekum was a personal friend of the murdered man, and admired him greatly as a statesman and an orator. The ability to make good speeches is supposed to be not uncommon among Socialists. Yet at the Stuttgart Congress, where Suedekum, as chairman, was called on to translate each speech that was made into other languages, he was so carried away by Jaures' eloquence that, when the speech was at an end, he quite forgot that it had not been in his own language, and proceeded, much to the amusement of the gathering, to "translate" it into French.

"And to think," he said, "that the French Socialists have not made the slightest effort to bring his murderer to justice! It is easy to understand that the French Government should want his trial postponed until after the war, since the French Government consists of 300 bankers and lawyers whose money is in the war. But that the Socialists themselves should expressly consent to this—as they have done! Do you suppose for a moment that a thing like that could happen in Germany if one of our leaders were murdered? Every Socialist, no matter how opposed to the murderd man on matters of party policy, would have insisted on bringing the assassin to justice at once!"

Part of Belgian "Reconstruction."

The German Government has made use of Dr. Sudekum's familiarity with labor problems to help it in dealing with the Belgian situation. Unemployment and similar problems which come up in the occupied districts of Belgium are under the jurisdiction of the Red Cross. So it happened that some of the most important work in the solution of these problems for Germany has been done by an American-born children's physician, Dr. Charles Noeggerrath of Freiburg. Dr. Suedekum was, for a time, transferred from the regular army to the Red Cross, in order to help and advise him in his work.

"The trouble in dealing with the unemployed problem is always that it is hard to tell whether a man can't work, or whether he won't work. This is aggravated, in Belgium, by the fact that the English are making a systematic attempt to cripple industry in the district we have occupied, by inducing the natives to refuse to work for us. They have spread the report that we make the Belgians work at the making of ammunition to be used against their own countrymen. That is absolutely untrue. Of course, there is no denying that any work they do for us helps us indirectly in fighting against their allies. They mine coal for us; coal is used to move trains, which, in some cases, carry German soldiers. Yet you could hardly call coal ammunition on that account.

Making Paupers in Belgium.

"The English actually subsidized the poorer classes, to keep them from working for us. They smuggled money into the country along with food, or arrange it through bankers in neutral countries. But they do not pay the workmen enough to make them independent—something like a franc a day—just enough to keep them idle, and to keep them appealing to our charity. The bad effects of this systematic pauperization on the character of the lower-class Belgians will last for long after the war."

I spoke of the accusation sometimes made in England and America that Belgium is being used as "a milch cow for Germany."

"We have paid for everything," he answered.

Then he spoke of the documents belonging to the Belgian Foreign Office, in a case which German soldiers had for months been using as an improvised bench, until someone who had been sitting on them happened to open them, and of the importance which had been attached to them as bearing on the origin of the war, and tending to justify Germany out of the mouth of her present enemy. He said that he had himself looked these papers over in Brussels and that he was convinced that they alone were enough to show that this war is for Germany a defensive war—even as far as Belgium is concerned.

"Every one knows by this time," he said, "that, in the hope of becoming King of France, the King of Belgium had, long before the war, entered into an agreement against Germany with France and England."

I asked how Germany could possibly call it a defensive war when the initial aggression was not against Germany, but took place in one of the most distant provinces of Austria.

"If the Japanese were to seize a strip of land along the California coast, would not the whole United States rise up to defend it? Would New York say, 'What business is California of mine?' It would be recognized at once that Japan was simply getting a foothold for further conquest. Well, the same was true here. If Austria were crushed, Germany would not survive her very long. The aggression of Servia against Austria was really an aggression of Russia against Germany."

Dr. Suedekum knows America very well, having traveled extensively—and intensively—in America four years ago. There were times in talking to him—he speaks excellent English—when the sense of being with a man whose affiliations and doctrine are international would make me forget that I was with a German officer. He reminded me of it by suddenly remarking, very quietly, but with the same accusing gleam in his eye that I had seen elsewhere on other occasions:

"You know, it is very pleasant to have American ammunition exploding in your immediate neighborhood!"

"Is it any worse," I asked, "than any other ammunition?"

"In the beginning it was not so bad. The American ammunition was not as good as the French at the very first. But it soon improved. And now it is excellent—excellent. All the German soldiers can testify to that.'

In spite of his somewhat grim feeling on the subject, he does not agree with so many of his countrymen that, "but for American ammunition, the war would now be over." He believes that it is the ignorance of the French and particularly of the English as to the true course of events which prevents an immediate peace.

"They do not understand Germany," he said, "they are ignorant of the true state of affairs here. If they know conditions here as I do, they would give up, one for all, the idea that Germany can be crushed."

Parents Should Know of this Splendid Remedy

Simple Laxative Compound Helps to Correct Constipation in Children.

With all children there are times when the bowels fail to act naturally and it becomes necessary for the parents to administer a remedy. Cathartics and purgatives should never be used, as these agents afford only temporary relief, while their violent action shocks the entire system unduly. Mrs. Eva F. Gaff, 517 10th St., Washington, D. C., says that her little girl, Marie, had been subject to constipation, and that she found Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin the best remedy, because of its mildness, and now always keeps a bottle of it in the house.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a compound of simple laxative herbs, free from opiates or narcotic drugs of any kind, and is an ideal remedy for children because of its mild action and positive effect. Its use tends to strengthen the impaired bowel action and restore normal regularity.

It is important that parents should know of a dependable remedy with no unpleasant after effects, griping or strain. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin costs only fifty cents a bottle and can be procured at any drug store. To obtain a trial bottle, free of charge, write to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 454 Washington St., Monticello, Ill.

A SIMPLE WAY TO REMOVE DANDRUFF

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.—ADV.

HIT ONLY THREE TIMES, CAN'T TELL MUCH ABOUT WAR

St. Louisan, Former Australian, Now With British, "Only Out There Seven Months."

What's a chap to write about the war when he has been at the front only seven months and has only been hit three times? That is what Charles W. Prince, former St. Louisan, wants to know. In a letter written by him, just received by Elwood Milligan of 1441A Hamilton avenue, a Post-Dispatch stereotyper, he says deprecatingly: "I am afraid I cannot tell you much about the war. I was only out there seven months. I was hit three times, on the head, the neck and in the back."

He hastens to add that he came near being hit several other times in several other different places but that is not to be considered strange. "When you come to figure," he writes, "the number of shells fired, not to mention the bullets and bayonets, which do a lot of damage, you will readily understand that thousands come pretty close."

Came From Australia.

Prince came to St. Louis from Australia about 15 months ago and was a stereotyper on the Post-Dispatch up to nine months ago, when he resigned to go to England and enlist. He is a signaler in the Tenth Battalion of the Rifle Brigade and when he wrote the letter, March 1, he was just out of the hospital and back at his depot in Birmingham, waiting to be sent to the front again.

While, as he naively observes, a man who has seen only seven months' service and has been wounded only three times cannot be expected to tell much about the war, his letter reveals a deeper reason than lack of things to write about. "The boys back from the front." he writes, "don't talk much about the fighting. We try to forget it. I could not sleep for three weeks and when I laid awake at night I used to see some awful pictures on the walls.

"Quite All Right Now."

"I am quite all right now, but have not yet regained my full strength, but a few long marches will soon fix me up.

"I don't think the Germans can possibly win, although it may take the allies a long time to make them quit. The Germans are making a big dash for Paris, but they are only sacrificing life for nothing. I have seen a couple of their attacks They will go on until they are wiped out of existence.

"I have plenty of souvenirs, including 32 nice pieces of shell that were taken out of my body. One piece was off one of these celebrated Jack Johnsons.

"The Birmingham address will always find me if I am alive. My two brothers go out again in a few days. I am going to give them a send-off."

WEBSTER GROVES TO VOTE ON BOND ISSUE MARCH 25

Campaign for Paid Fire Department and Water Main Extension Expected to Win.

"Spend a Dollar to Save Five," is the slogan of a campaign which has been started by the citizens of Webster Groves looking toward the passage on March 25 of a two-fold bond issue—one for $15,000 for the establishment of a paid fire department and the other for $17,000 for an extension of water mains.

Tags and large placards bearing this slogan made their appearance Thursday on Webster Groves door knobs and in store windows. Advocates of the bond issues contend the saving in insurance will mean $15,000 annually, and at an increase of the tax rate of only 6 cents on $100 valuation. The two bonds are expected to carry overwhelmingly.

St. Louis fire department officials have added their endorsements to those of the Webster Groves Merchants' Association, the Fourth Ward Improvement Association, Webster Groves Frisco Association, Webster Groves Motor Club, the Garden Club, the fire committee of the city council, the Welfare Association, and citizens' committees in Helfenstein Park, Webster Park, South Webster Park and Algonquin. A series of mass meetings will close the night before the election.

MOVE TO AID CAR SHORTAGE

Circular Asks Shippers and Carriers to Co-Operate.

The Public Service Commission of Missouri is sending out a circular calling attention to the serious car shortage all over the country and urging shippers and carriers to co-operate in the loading, movement and releasing of cars in order to obtain the greatest use of the available car supply.

The commission urges that shippers place orders for cars at least 48 hours prior to the time they want to begin loading, that they do not order in excess of the number of cars that can be loaded within 24 hours after receipt, that consignees unload cars immediately upon their being placed, that shippers load cars to capacity where possible, that carriers place cars promptly and without discrimination, that carriers arrange to move cars on first train after shipping orders are received, and that carriers move cars expeditiously and place them for unloading immediately upon arrival.

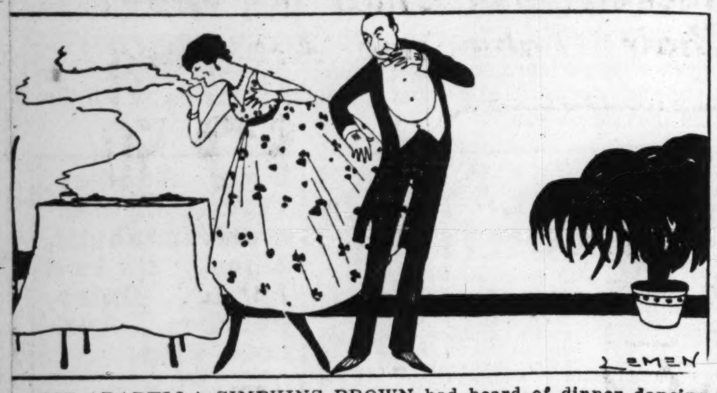
ARABELLA DINES AND DANCES.



MISS ARABELLA SIMPKINS BROWN had heard of dinner dancing
And marveled at the great renown of giddy prandial prancing.
She found it hard to understand so strange a combination il she heard the ragtime band in breezy syncopation iting all the diners up to one-step evolutions
l then she quickly dropped her cup and Lenten resolutions.
grieve to state she quite forgot the dinner so inviting.
lovely soup, so steaming hot before those notes inciting
l called her forth to gaily prance in measure lightly tripping, cold when ended was the dance and hardly worth the sipping.
then they brought a little bird, all garnished up with sauces, kind that you no doubt have heard they feed to Wall Street bosses.
she had scarcely had a bite, when, lo that ragtime clatter,
e that poor bird an awful fright and scared it off the platter.
l so, not losing any chance, she quickly left the table do that foxy fox-trot dance as well as she was able.
so from course to course again that music so compelling ild stir the feet of girls and men in giddy measure swelling.
urning home we heard her say the dance was just too killing iough a dinner served that way was not so very filling.

A LOOK AROUND

By CLARK McADAMS

THE pursuit of Pancho Villa is not a war. It i just an elaborate and in some re- cts remarkable man hunt. If ncho is to be joined by any great mber of Mexicans who resent American invasion, we shall have d of all that goes to make up the y of pursuit, and probably more. here is no such rally to his cause, ghosts of all prior bad men shall e occasion to groan. None of m was ever pursued by any such t. No aeroplane ever sailed und over the mountain tops seek- to discover them in their caves. such corps of correspondents ever nored for place in the expedition. onimo was a bad man, and the y went after him in style; but ing to this. Billy the Kid was a man, but all we ever did about vas to put Pat Garrett on his and have Pat hunt him down. as remained for Villa to make sort of thing take on the sem- e of war. Why has he done it? Simply because our old friend Carranza, despite his whiskers and other faults, had him licked. Villa is a much more popular man in Mexico than Carranza. He not only robs the rich and gives to the poor, but he won't work, which endears him to everybody south of the Rio Grande. If he had any gumption at all about stable government, or knew how to pick his oil corporation in a revolution, he would be President of Mexico today and the sole proprietor of the imperial wine cellar. His military genius far exceeds that of any one else in the republic. It is only when he runs out of money and ammunition that he is defeated. He can always get men. Given Carranza's executive ability and command of the sinews of war, he would take his last soldier away from him and give the redoubtable Funston a real fight. As it is, probably not half the men who were with him in the raid on Columbus remain with him now. The others have taken their separate paths through the wilderness. Most of them have probably joined the pursuit. It is always so with the following of a bandit. When the picking is rich, or the sport is good, as it has been with Villa for the last few months, they are many. When fortune turns its back upon them they melt like snow in the summer sun. Some day, rounding a crag in the Sierra Madre, the pursuit shall come upon its quarry. It will not be the same quarry that galloped out of Columbus, but the hollow-eyed and indomitable Villa—beaten—deserted—and run to earth. It is always so. See Funston's "How I Finally Bagged Aguinaldo."

VILLA stood at the end of his string. The Mexicans are afraid of the United States. Everybody between this country and South America is. To play upon fear was the one resort remaining to him. He rounded up all the wild men he could and struck the army camp at Columbus. What he figured would happen was this: We would go across the border after him, and Mexico would rise to repel invasion. To Villa, figuring somewhere on a rock with a piece of stone for a slate pencil, it was like putting two and two together. That it has not turned out as he thought it would is no new experience to Villa. It never does. The truth is that Villa can't figure. He can plot and fight, but when it comes to reasoning from cause to effect he is not only one of the poorest logicians in the Mexican republic, but it would be hard to beat him anywhere on earth. Like the Psalmist, the mistakes of his life have been many. This is probably his last. Big as they are, the mountains of Mexico are not big enough to shelter for long a man whose mental processes are as involved as are those of Pancho Villa. The tumult and the shouting will pass in the direction of his flight, and we shall then have a more or less prolonged period of quiet. Some day the people along the border will see the boys coming back. Either they will have Pancho or they will have his scalp. It is only a question of time. The chance that the Mexican people will interfere is not very great. The much greater likelihood is that Carranza's men will catch Pancho before we do. It takes a Mexican to catch a Mexican, just as it takes a thief to catch a thief. Make no mistake about the cleverness of those people in the wilds. They can ride and shoot and hide out with any other men on earth. It is only when they are drawn up in battle array, with a brass band at their head and a lot of bad generals at their rear, that they are at a disadvantage. Man for man, they are probably the equals of anyone who will go after them in the kind of warfare they like. There is a popular impression that one American can whip 10 Mexicans. He cannot. The mistake arises from the fact that one American general can whip 10 Mexican generals.

MOST of us have attended meetings at the City Club. There, amid the rattle of dishes and the clash of forks, have arisen from time to time great men and small, eager to tell us what is what. One sometimes wonders whether that is as good for one's digestion as it might be, or if members of the City Club are probably to be longer-lived than the rest of us. At any rate, there was none of that racket at the City Club the other day when a representative of the Biological Survey addressed a mass meeting of St. Louis duck-shooters in the matter of the migratory bird law. The hour was 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The place was as still as twilight in a rose garden. When Mr. Bancroft, who came out here to find out what it is the sportsmen want, stood up on his feet to tell us where the Government stands, one could have heard a pin drop. It was a serious audience that gentleman faced — a weather-beaten, hard-thinking, one-minded audience. He said in substance that the people at Washington have come to realize that this particular bit of governing is not entirely by consent of the governed, and he thought it would be possible to arrange for an open season here at a time when there is something to shoot. He suggested extending the open season in this part of the valley up to some time in March. That sounded good to everybody straining his hearing for some such good news, and he was encouraged to proceed. He did proceed, and then the sportsmen said what they thought about it. The result of the discussion was a request for an open season to March 31. Mr. Banvroft tucked that suggestion under his hat and bowed himself out. What will come of it nobody knows. Everybody hereabouts tried hard to hunt ducks when the Government said they ought to be hunted, but nobody got any ducks. That was the trouble. Now we shall see if the Government is going to let us hunt them when we think they ought to be hunted. If we still do not get any, we shall be willing to admit that we did not know any more about it than the Government did.

SEES NEW ERA FOR LABOR AT CLOSE OF WAR

Ellis Island Immigration Commissioner Believes Wages Will Be Much Higher.

The "tramp spirit," aroused in the European nations by the war, will be a big factor in providing the United States with new citizens after peace is declared, Frederick C. Howe thinks. Howe, who is United States Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island, was in St. Louis Wednesday, speaking before the Business Men's League and the Civic League.

Talking with a Post-Dispatch reporter before his address to the business men, Howe spoke of the conditions and tendencies which will stimulate immigration after the war, and the countertendencies which will hold men in Europe, and may even "suck back" men from the United States to European countries. The chief element of uncertainty in the situation is the question whether European Governments will permit emigration.

Howe's conclusion was that, in any case, the labor supply of the United States is likely to be even more seriously disturbed than it has thus far been, and that American cities will have to give more attention to the welfare and comfort of their working classes, in order to hold their own in the competition for men.

Millions More Restless.

"Thirty million men," Howe said, "have been made restless and discontented. They have seen a new side of life, and they have been taught to rely on themselves, and have learned, too, the spirit of democracy. It will take years to readjust them in their former places in farms, mills and factories, and many of them will not wish to go back. The ruling powers cannot make the mind of Europe what it was before the war.

"A tramp spirit will have been created and of these 30,000,000 men, hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, will restlessly look toward America.

"Beside those actually participating in the war, 400,000,000 persons have been disorganized, their life upset, their property in wide regions destroyed. The same disturbing influences will affect them, and will drive many of them to seek new homes.

"Taxation will be another of the forces driving men out of Europe. The war debt of the first year was $20,000,000,000, in the second year it will probably be increased to $35,000,000,000, and at the end of the war taxation in all the warring countries will be almost unbearable. For every able-bodied man it will mean two days' work out of every six.

Sick of Militarism.

"How this will be borne, no one can tell, but it is sure that men will be driven to look from European lands to a country free of such burdens. Many others, sick of militarism, will turn here in the hope that they and their children may escape its burdens.

"The advance guard of immigration, after the war, will undoubtedly be composed of widows and fatherless children. Immigration is subsidized by the immigrants already here. Probably 70 per cent of those who come to America are aided in coming by relatives who have preceded them. That is true in normal times, and the new conditions will greatly increase this tendency.

"The Federal immigration statutes forbid the admission to this country of persons likely to become public charges, and this will keep out some widows and disabled men, who might otherwise come here. But the great number who will have relatives in this country, promising to look after them, will get in, and the sons and daughters of European soldiers will become, in a few years, a part of our industrial population.

"But it is possible that the free flow of immigration will be checked by restrictions, imposed not by us, but by the nations now at war. Those nations will realize, after the war, that their most valuable assets are human beings. Because of the millions killed and the colossal reconstruction work to be done, there will probably be a labor vacuum in Europe.

Problems for Nations.

"Germany, Great Britain and France, which are the most highly organized industrial countries, will have especial reason for keeping their men, to help them rebuild their industries and regain their trade.

"The warring countries have been socialized by the war, and this will be a further force in keeping their men at home. These nations have taken over their railroads, their plants for the manufacture of munitions, their agencies for control of the food supply, and all the primary industries of the state. This is particularly true in Germany, where state socialization was far advanced before the war.

"Wages in European countries are bound to be high after the war. Regardless of any action that Governments may take, wages will go up when there are fewer men than jobs. After the Black Plague in England, criminal statutes were enacted, providing that workmen should be punished if they demanded more pay than they had formerly received. But in spite of these laws, wages shot up.

Wages Likely to Rise.

"If there is a shortage of labor after the war, as there seems certain to be, wages will rise in Europe, and the workers of Germany and England may find themselves drawing wages as high as those paid in the United States.

"These wage increases will cause men to remain in Europe who would otherwise come here. But the European nations may not be content with keeping the men they have. They may try to draw back their former citizens from America.

"I have been informed, from a source which I believe to be reliable, that definite plans are under way, in the central European countries, to attract able-bodied men from the United States.

with their accumulations, to provide capital for reconstruction processes.

"This is in accord with the fact which has been learned in investigations made by Eastern industrial concerns that great bodies of workmen are planning to return to Europe after the war. Many are going back to see about their relatives and friends, from whom they have been unable to hear. Others will take their savings to invest in land.

A young man from Ukrania, a vast region of Southwest Russia, told me of his purpose to return there and take his choice of a homestead from the baronial estates which, he hears, are to be divided after the war. Whether his expectations are realized or not, there is no doubt that there will be, after the war, a great dividing of large estates held by a few rich families.

Pennsylvania mine owners are already growing apprehensive about their Polish miners, who are talking of going home in great numbers as soon as peace is declared. Austrian and Hungarian laborers, throughout the East, are also planning to return.

"How long they will stay in Europe and how ready others will be to come here and take their places in American industry will depend on industrial conditions there and here. The European Governments, with all the capital they can enlist, will still have a vast problem to undertake. The biggest task will be to re-establish agriculture, when horses and cattle are lacking, and implements have fallen into decay.

"The year, probably the two years, following the end of the war, will be harder times in Europe than the present. Europe will have to adopt a new policy of state functions, to invent a new form of banking, and to grubstake its peasant proprietors. The nations that do not finance their citizens at the outset will have 12 to 24 months of famine and poverty. Such a condition would greatly stimulate emigration to America.

"We need not expect to see any large immigration from Western Germany, or from France. There has been little immigration from Germany in the past 25 years. The German cities are built for people rather than property, and the socialized character of German industry will help in retaining the workers. There may not be any considerable immigration from France. It has not been sending us many immigrants in late years, and while France differs greatly from Germany, she has an element of strength and thrift in the great number of her small peasant proprietors-- there are 10,000,000 land owners in France. And people do not leave property.

Flood of Aliens Expected.

"But I do expect to see a large immigration from Poland, Silesia (Southeast Germany), Austria-Hungary, Russia and Italy, insofar as the Governments will permit it. I look, too, for a substantial immigration from Great Britain and Ireland.

"Italy is likely to continue her liberal policy of permitting emigration. Italy knows the value of her returned emigrants who have lived in America and made their money here. These returned emigrants have introduced American ways and have democratized Italy, and it was their savings, I have been told, which made it possible for Italy to enter the war.

"The Jews, too, are likely to come here in great numbers, for the Jews suffer hardships in Europe, and they know that the Jews in this country are well organized, philanthropic and intelligent in handling their communal problems.

"Our immigration policies, in the last 50 years, contain little to be proud of. We have admitted the immigrants, dumped them outside the receiving station and told them to take care of themselves. We have not told them where to go to find friends, jobs, living places. Some of the things which the Government has neglected to do have been done, in New York, by the politicians of Tammany Hall, and I feel that a certain gratitude is due them.

"Immigration is now at a standstill, and more are going to Europe than are coming from Europe. This has already resulted in the biggest demand for labor, in relation to the supply, that I have ever known of, and this condition will increase until a considerable time after the war ends, and perhaps, for the reasons I have indicated, the end of the war, and the return of laborers now here may cause a much greater shortage.

Cities Will Appeal to Labor.

"Under these conditions, not only must America compete with Europe for labor, but different parts of the United States, and different cities and industrial sections, must compete with each other. The cities that do the most for their people, and make the greatest effort to attract and retain working people, are the ones which will have the best chance to hold their industrial prosperity.

"The city of Cleveland, I believe, does more for its people than any other American city. (Howe is a former resident of Cleveland). This policy has enabled Cleveland to pass a dozen cities in population in the last 30 years.

"The city that has parks in the industrial districts and playgrounds, and public baths, and free employment agencies, and health officers who are both considerate and efficient, will draw workingmen, in competition with cities which are not democratized, socialized, humanized.

"America is on the threshold of a great look forward, a co-operative, democratic, social move for her people—the substituting of humanity for property, of the collective good for the individual good. The more we emphasize the collective good, the greater the return to the individual.

"It is likely that the prospective shortage in immigration will result in a stimulus to social legislation in the United States, and that, from the competition between cities and employers for workmen will come a real social program."

For Coughs and Colds PERUNA A Scientific Remedy

A cold is a congestion. Some place an inflammation sets up. Nature tries to throw this off. The irritation produces sneezing and coughing. A scientific remedy for colds must relieve the congestion. To do that the entire body must be treated This is accomplished by Peruna for the following reasons:

First—Peruna is a tonic. It restores balance and invigorates the system.

Second—Peruna is especially valuable for the healing of the mucous membranes, the local seat of colds.

Third—Peruna aids poor digestion and restores impaired appetite.

Fourth—Peruna dispels congestion of the membranes, which absorb your air and food, and expel the waste products from your body.

Fifth—Peruna as a catarrhal remedy has no superior. Colds are acute catarrh---sometimes local; often systemic.

Sixth—Peruna cleans the body of all waste matter.

Everybody who has used it knows Peruna is remarkably effective in each of these capacities.

WITNESS THESE LETTERS

Mrs. I. D. Hayes, 1937 Druid Hill Ave., Baltimore Md., writes: "Peruna is one of the best remedies for grip, cold in the head, sore throat, nervous headaches and coughs that has ever been discovered. After the use of one bottle in my family, I don't feel safe without Peruna in my house."

In a later letter Mrs. Hayes says: "I am never without a bottle of Peruna in my house. I give the children Peruna if they have a cold, and it always relieves them. I had catarrhal bronchitis and it relieved me."

Mr. C. O. Peterson, Lieut. Engine Co. No. 56, No. 3327 N. Hamilton Avenue., Chicago, Ills., writes: "Last year I had a severe attack of la grippe, which left me very weak, so that I was unable to perform my duties. Several of my friends advised me to build up on Peruna, and I found it by far the finest tonic and invigorator I had ever used. In two weeks I was strong and well, and if ever I am exposed to unusual hardship incident with my duties at fires, I take a dose or two of Peruna and find that it keeps me in good health."

A dose of Peruna now and then is a wonderful protection against contagious diseases.

Mrs. Mary O. Miller, Chaplain of Patriotic Daughters of America, Indianapolis, Ind., writes: "I have found Peruna of especial benefit in cases of female trouble. It restores the strength in a very short time and is pleasant to take. Its action on the whole system is very mild, but sure. We have used it in the family for a number of years, and when any of us take a cold it is the first remedy we take, and a few doses will generally cure, if the cold has not been neglected. But the persistent use of Peruna will cure a cold of even long standing."

Look to Your Interest

Peruna has stood the test of 44 years before the American public. Its merit has been strikingly recognized by thousands. Let their relief from sickness and suffering convince you. What has helped them will in all probability aid you. Forget all prejudices and look to your own interest.

You may obtain Peruna in Tablet form for convenience.

JESSE T. DANIEL GIVES HIS SIDE OF TRUST DEED CASE

Realty Dealer Acquitted by Court Order Says He Induced Others to Meet Their Obligations.

Jesse T. Daniel, a real estate dealer, who was acquitted Friday, by Circuit Judge Kimmel's order, of a charge of obtaining money by false pretenses, yesterday sent the Post-Dispatch a letter giving his version of the transaction which caused his indictment. The letter is also signed by Edwin Daniel, president of the Daniel Realty and Building Co., of which Jesse T. Daniel is secretary and treasurer.

Daniel was accused by William Brantner Temm, a dentist, of selling him, for $632.75, a paper which was represented as being a first deed of trust on a house and lot in Vinita Park, St. Louis County, but which, it was alleged, proved not to be a first deed, there being two previous deeds. In this connection it was stated, in Thursday's Post-Dispatch, that since the indictment Daniel had made this paper a valid first deed by taking up the other incumbrances on the property. In his letter Daniel says this statement was incorrect, and that his firm, which had acted as an agent throughout, induced others to meet their obligations.

Judge Kimmel ordered the dismissal of the charge because, in his opinion, Temm had not suffered loss or been defrauded at the time of the indictment, since he was protected by a note which had not at that time come due; and because the Judge was not convinced that Daniel's representations as to the deed were the chief factor in inducing Temm to invest his money.

The letter addressed to the editor of the Post-Dispatch, and signed by Jesse T. and Edwin Daniel, is as follows:

Statement by the Daniels.

"Owing to a rule of law justifying the trial court in ordering an acquittal of the charges against Jesse T. Daniel, the facts constituting the defense, under which we not only hope to bring about the same result, but, in a measure at least, to restore in the minds of the community and our many customers and friends the confidence heretofore enjoyed by us in the conduct of our real estate business, were not brought out at the trial of the case; and feeling that the public, through the press, should be apprised of the facts, with a view of obtaining thereby complete vindication of any wrongdoing, unlawful intent or criminal act, occasioned by the recent prosecution, we deem it in our interest to make this statement of facts surrounding the transaction occasioning these charges.

"First, it might be well to correct an article appearing Thursday in one of our leading afternoon papers to the effect that we had made restitution by clearing the title to the lot of land in question, thereby automatically rendering the deed sold by us what it was represented to the complaining witness. In this connection permit us to state that, as the facts hereinafter contained will more fully show, we had absolutely no control over the original indebtedness against the property, and even had we been so inclined we had no means of paying or otherwise satisfying the lawful obligations of another, but merely, irrespective of the charges pending, insisted upon the proper adjustment of a deal passing through our hands, and, though at the eleventh hour, succeeded in inducing the parties to carry out this obligation under a written contract upon which the entire transaction was predicated.

"In negotiating this matter the corporation, of which both of the undersigned are members, acted merely in the capacity of agent, having no interest in or control over the parcel of land involved, employed solely for the purpose of seeing that the terms of a certain written contract previously entered into between a real estate concern and one of its clients were properly carried into effect, involving the sale or trade of a small lot of land in St. Louis County, rendering whatever assistance to complete the deal demanded of us.

Sale of the First Deed of Trust.

"Having rendered every service on our part, in the faithful performance of our duties under the erms of our employment, in the completion of the transaction so far as the interests of our clients were involvel, we were prevailed upon by the other contracting parties to negotiate the sale of the first deed of trust against the land, under the terms of the contract, and on representations upon which we relied, having no occasion to surround the same with doubt, we negotiated the sale of the first deed of trust, and made due accounting for the amount coming into our hands by reason thereof, to the parties legally entitled thereto, and disbursed the sum as directed by the rightful owners thereof, without discount or compensation.

"Our defense would have shown that we followed instructions under the terms of a written contract; that we faithfully performed our duties and complied with each of the terms of said contract; that we accounted for and disbursed the proceeds; that our efforts in the matter were effected faithfully and expediently; but that, notwithstanding the other of the contracting parties failed, or at least delayed for some considerable time, to carry into effect his obligations under his contract, which, in the meanwhile occasioned the filing of the charges just dismissed by the Court, tending greatly to harm our heretofore unblemished standing in the community in which we conducted our business, therefore we are making this statement of facts, hoping to be righted by the publication thereof, in the eyes of the public, upon whom we have long depended for a livelihood."

Special Program by Choir.

A special musical program of selections from Stainer's Crucifixion will be given at the Grace Church, Skinker road and Waterman avenue, by Grace M. E. Church choir at both morning and evening services today under direction of George A. Bluthardt.

EAT LESS MEAT AND TAKE SALTS IF YOUR KIDNEYS ACHE OR BACK HURTS

Says Bladder irritation or Rheumatism means your Kidneys aren't straining uric acid. Begin taking Salts.

Meat forms uric acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizzness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink, which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases.—ADV.

FRENCH PREPARING FOR BIG TOURIST RUSH AFTER WAR

Hotel Keepers Expect 1,000,000 Americans to Visit Country to See Scene of Battles.

Correspondence of the Associated Press.

PARIS, March 6.—A "Committee of French Hotel-Keepers" that has recently come into existence estimates that a million Americans will come to France immediately after the war to visit the sites which have become famous during the hostilities.

All sorts of suggestions are being put forward. One is that a broad highway should be laid along the front from Dixmude to Belfort, to be called "The Holy Road," with plenty of good roads at intervals, simply furnished, but each containing from 80 to 100 rooms and an abundant supply of baths. Another suggestion is the formation of special tourist trains running from the Channel to Belfort, in which the tourists should live and sleep while sight-seeing.

Meantime the Committee of Hotel-keepers is busy preparing for the advent of the visitors by training staffs to replace the German and Austrian managers and waiters of the pre-war period, renewing furniture, repainting and repapering, and in particular improving the sanitary arrangements in the various hotels.

A writer in La Renaissance, Louis Forest, thinks France ought to devote her efforts to attracting tourists instead of organizing with a view to increasing her export trade. "Why," he asks, "send our products to the foreigner when we can bring the foreigner to our products? Let us then "export inland"—let us attract the foreigner and put him in the way of seeking and testing our native wares."

This writer, by the way, warns his fellow countrymen that neutral speculators are already buying up French hotels in large numbers

The renovation of the French hotel system, in view of tourist traffic, will require a great deal of capital. This, says Forest, must be supplied by America, which has such large financial interests in France that she is substantially concerned in French prosperity.

MANY INVENTIONS OFFERED TO FRANCE, FEW ACCEPTED

Fewer Than One in Thirty, Designed for Nation's Soldiers, Prove to Be of P[illegible] al Value.

PARIS, March 18.—The War Inventions Committee, between August, 1914, and November, 1915, examined 8663 inventions concerning national defense and accepted only 317. The number of inventions in ordinary times varied from 800 to 1200 annually.

One hundred and thirty-two of those accepted were either incomplete or were merely an adaptation of existing devices to military purposes. The remaining 185, however, were of real use for national defense purposes. Five thousand three hundred more inventions were submitted between November, 1915, and March, 1916. Of these, 300 are still being studied and of the 5000 others 70 have been sent to the Ministry of War or the Ministry of Marine, with favorable indorsement of the committee, and 12 are being perfected.

The committee has received a number of valuable studies on the subject of employment of guns against aeroplanes and dirigibles. A total of 225 original inventions have been adopted to cover all branches of warfare, including those having to do with hygiene and the comfort of the soldier and with war surgery, as well as with methods of offense and defense.

ENGLISH ADJUTANT GENERAL DESCENDANT OF FAMOUS ACTOR

Sir. C. F. N. Macready Noted as a Wit, Credited With Jest on Kitchener's Army.

LONDON, March 18.—Sir C. F. N. Macready, who has been appointed Adjutant-General of the British army, is a descendant of the famous actor Macready. He has the carriage of the Scotch soldier. In the Gordon Highlanders he obtained his regimental experience.

Gen. Macready has been brought back from the front to assist in the reorganization of British army control which is being put into effect by Sir William Robertson, the new Chief of Staff. He was well known to the British public before the war as the soldier to whom was entrusted the difficult task of controlling the big labor outbreaks in Liverpool and Manchester.

He has a reputation as a wit, and was credited with a widely circulated jest some months ago, when there was a good deal of talk in army circles about the delay in the appearance of Kitchener's so-called new army at the front. According to the story, Macready one evening while at dinner at British headquarters at St. Omer put the question: "Which of the great neutral Powers do you think will join in first—Italy or Kitchener's army?"

Bill for Law Against Threats.

WASHINGTON, March 18.—Upon recommendation of the Attorney-General, Senator Culberson of Texas today introduced a bill to provide for Federal prosecution of persons who make threats against the life of the President of the United States or any official in line of succession to the presidency.

150 Divorces on Desertion.

PITTSFIELD, Ill., March 18.—During the past 10 years there have been 284 divorces granted in the Pike County Circuit Court, more than 150 of them on the charge of desertion.

One Need in Tuberculosis

is careful attention to hygienic living and proper diet. Science is agreed that fresh air, rest and avoidance of food excesses constitute the most effective non-medical treatment in this widespread disease.

Often, however, these measures need supplementing by proper medication. The system lacks sufficient resistance to overcome the attack, and something must be done to assist in upbuilding the patient's strength.

In many cases of this sort Eckman's Alterative has been used with marked success. Its efficacy in this disease has borne fruit in a record of numerous apparent recoveries, and where a tonic is indicated it has produced most beneficial results

Since it contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, it is safe to try. At your druggist's or direct from

LONDONERS NOW GET THEIR NEWS IN CONDENSED STYLE

Articles More on Order of American Style—Measure Due to Economy in Paper.

LONDON, March 18.—Londoners are getting their daily news in more condensed form than ever before in history. The change was made necessary by the regulations governing the importation of paper, a measure of economy brought on by the war.

The public was prepared for the change through the papers, which for weeks in advance published notices calling upon their readers to order their paper each day in advance of their news dealer. In other words, only enough papers to meet the known demand would be run off the presses. Papers which formerly were 12 pages in size have been cut down to six. An early effort has been made also to tell the articles in fewer words, after the style of American papers.

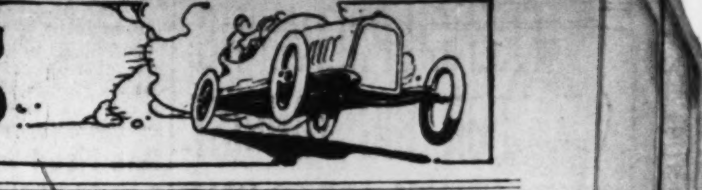
AUTOMOBILE NEWS



CARBURETOR IS, EXPERT CLAIMS, MOTOR'S HEART

By WILLIAM H. STEWART JR., President Stewart Automobile School.

The carburetor is unquestionably the most sensitive part of the automobile. Upon it depends the right mixture of gases to be used in the cylinder. Slight adjustments determine the efficiency of the motor.

As a liquid gasoline burns rapidly but will not explode. A small quantity of gasoline, however, mixed with a proper amount of air, forms a very explosive mixture. Especially is this true when the gases are compressed.

We are all familiar with liquid gasoline, which is carrie in a tank on the automobile. In order to convert this liquid into useful power it must be let into the cylinder in the form of an explosive gas, hence the necessity for a transformer such as the carburetor

It is true there are many makes and types of carburetors, but all are designed to accomplish one purpose, namely, to mix gasoline and air in right proportions to form an explosive mixture at all engine speeds. In stationary types of motors, where the engine speed is more or less constant, it is not a difficult matter to effect carburetion. In the automobile type motor the variation of engine speeds is such that the carburetor must be well designed to insure efficient and economical carburetion under all conditions. This type motor must pull at speeds ranging from 200 to 3000 r. p. m. Even when the throttle is partially opened a perfect mixture is required.

Referring to the drawing, let us become familiar with the names of the parts of a simple type carburetor in order to understand how the liquid gasoline is converted into an explosive mixture. In the first place, the supply tank must be suspended at a higher level than the carburetor so that gasoline will flow to it, even when the car is on up grade. If the supply tank is carried at a lower level then air pressure or vacuum system must be employed to force the gasoline to the carburetor under all road conditions.

Gasoline pipe A leads from supply tank to float chamber D. This chamber, with its float, and float valve B, automatically supply gasoline required at spray nozzle N. Gasoline will continue to flow from the supply tank into the float chamber until it reaches the level R, at which point the float valve automatically closes. This is accomplished through the float counter balance E and yoke G, which pivot at point F. As the gasoline flows into float chamber the float rises, lifting the counterbalance arms, which in turn lower the float valve B. The function of this float and valve mechanism is to maintain at the spray nozzle a constant level of fuel.

One may readily understand that as soon as the motor stops running the supply of gasoline must be stopped, and this is automatically accomplished by the float mechanism at the desired level; otherwise an overflow would take place at the spray nozzle and the gasoline be wasted while the car is standing. One may also appreciate the necessity for using clean gasoline. Any small particle of foreign matter lodging at point B would unseat the valve and permit gasoline to overflow at point N. Likewise when this valve becomes worn it is necessary to reseat it by tapping slightly or perhaps by replacement. Lost motion due to wear also takes place in the float counterbalances, thereby effecting a change in level of the gasoline at this spray nozzle. Slight changes of this kind quite often determine the efficiency of a motor. The float, whether of metal or cork, must at all times be buoyant. A slight leak in the metal float will prevent its proper action and upset the whole carburetor system. This type, however, is not a difficult matter to solder. The cork type float must be dried and shellacked in a manner to restore its buoyancy. Usually it is more economical and satisfactory to install a new one.

At needle valve O is another adjustment regulating the amount of gasoline passing through the spray nozzle. At P is the primary air inlet and at H is the auxiliary air inlet. S represents the mixing chamber where liquid gasoline is mixed with air and converted into an explosive gas. This gas is admitted to the manifold leading to the respective cylinders through throttle L. Throttle control M is connected to the hand control on the steering wheel and also to the foot accelerator. This throttle control regulates the volume of gas entering the cylinders. The speed and power of the motor are determined by the opening and closing of the throttle.

Referring again to the drawing of a simple type carburetor, three principal adjustments may be noted: First, the correct level of gasoline at the spray nozzle regulated by float adjustment and automatic float valve; second, the amount of gasoline passing through the spray nozzle controls by the needle valve adjustment at O; third, the tension of air valve spring J regulated by adjustment nut K. The tension of this spring controls the opening auxiliary air valve I, which admits more or less air, according to the speed of the motor.

As stated previously, the automobile type motor must be very flexible in order to operate to advantage under all conditions. The function of the carburetor is to furnish as nearly perfect a mixtures as possible at all speeds of motor. Usually at slow engine speed enough air passes through the primary inlet. As the throttle is opened and suction concentrated at the spray nozzle, due to the rush of air through the primary inlet, too much gas would be admitted through the spray nozzle and too rich a mixture result. So this suction is diverted from the spray nozzle at the opening of the auxiliary air valve, the opening of this valve depending upon the adjustment and tension of the spring.

From the foregoing one can understand the necessity of using clean gasoline and of keeping the carburetor clean. Any small obstruction in the gas passages, especially at the spray nozzle, will stop the motor. This opening is as small or smaller than a pinhead. A small particle of lint lodging at this point will stall 60-horsepower motor. In some cases this opening is not large enough to permit a drop of water to pass, hence the necessity for keeping water out of the gasoline. Water is heavier than gasoline and will settle at the bottom of the tank or at the bottom of the float chamber of the carburetor. Usually there is a drain at the base of the float chamber which permits withdrawal of any water or sediment.

If the car has been standing for some time it is advisable occasionally to open this drain for a few seconds. Almost every operator has experience water or other foreign matter in the gasoline. The first symptoms are back firing, indicating a lean mixtures, which is to say, too much air and not enough gasoline. Quite often by accelerating motor the obstruction may be drawn through the nozzle. More often, however, it is necessary to use the drain or even dissemble for cleaning.

SHIP TRAIN OF TRUCKS IN TWENTY-FOUR HOURS

Word has come to the local branch of the White company of Cleveland of a remarkable delivery of trucks for use by the United States army, just made by the White Co. A long-distance message was received March 16 from the War Department. Within twenty-four hours thereafter a trainload of army escort trucks was loaded and on its way to the Mexican border. The train carried 28 trucks, which will compose the first motor truck company of the American army. At the same time 34 expert men employed in the factory, who volunteered for the Mexican situation, were sent by special train to the Mexican border to man the trucks as soon as they are unloaded. The bodies for the trucks were shipped almost at the same time from the Quartermaster's depot at Jeffersonville, Ind.

BUICK MAN ADJUSTS FREIGHT CAR FAMINE

W. H. McCloud, general traffic manager of the Buick Motor Co. at Flint, Mich., spent two days in St. Louis early in the week investigating the local freight car situation, and while here visited the freight and traffic heads of the principal railroads in an effort to facilitate the movement of his company's product into the Southwest. Also to get the co-operation of the railroad officials in trying to increase the available freight car equipment for the moving of automobiles into the Southwestern section.

It is generally conceded that the present freight car shortage is the most serious that has confronted the industry since its inception, and coming as it does at practically the opening of the spring season, it works a particular hardship on dealers who have delayed their orders and who have failed to accumulate stock in advance during the early winter months when freight car equipment was not as scarce.

While there are cars of considerable numbers in storage in St. Louis, the greater portion of same are covered by actual ownerships by dealers in territory adjoining and no very great surplus for immediate sale exists. As a result, the delivery of cars to the consumer will necessarily depend upon the dealer's ability to procure equipment from the factory sufficient to supply their demands.

Mr. McCloud left here for Chicago, and will visit all of the principal Middle-west terminals before returning to Flint.

PROSPECTS ARE BRIGHT

"Prospects have never looked brighter for a big spring business," declares James E. Newell, president, Newell Motor Car Co.

"In the first place, finacial conditions throughout the country are excellent, and in the second place the good road mileage has increased wonderfully in the Middle West during the past year.

"The prices of the better grade cars are somewhat higher than formerly, due not so much to the increase in prices of materials, as to the fact that the automobile buying public are demanding better material and better workmanship, for what they are willing to pay."

"I predict that the 1916 season will be eminently successful and I also sincerely believe that the automobile buyer is at the present time getting a more sincere dollar for dollar value, than ever before in the history of the industry."

NEW FIRM IN ST. LOUIS TO HANDLE CASE CARS

W. S. Roberts, local branch house manager for the Case Co., announces that he has closed a contract with Stephens-Ruhl, Adams & Co. of Milwaukee, Wis., covering all cars allotted to the St. Louis branch that have not already been contracted for.

Mr. Stephens, who was formerly employed as a salesman by the Case Co. in Wisconsin, is here making a trip over the territory and has arranged for temporary headquarters at 2650 Locust street, and hopes to be permanently located after May 20 in the handsome new automobile building being erected at 3017 Locust street.

This firm now holds the agency for the Case car at Milwaukee, Wis., and Mr. Ruhl, who is a St. Louis man, is now in charge of the Milwaukee branch. Mr. Stephens will devote his entire time and attention to the service and sale of Case cars.

C. H. TEVIS PROMOTED

The appointment of Clarence H. Tevis to retail sales manager of the St. Louis branch of the Ford Motor Co., is one of the meteoric rises for which that company is notable. Mr. Tevis became affiliated with the Ford Motor Co. in February, 1915, at which time the sales force consisted of five men. In the past year the force has increased so greatly that the position of retail sales manager was created and Mr. Tevis was selected by W. C. Anderson, local manager, to fill the place. As a salesman Tevis has been successful and is perhaps one of the most widely known automobile men in the city.

HAYNES

America's Greatest "Light Six"

"As Sensitive to the Throttle
As the Wireless to the Wave"

Haynes Flexibility

America's greatest "Light Six" is not the greatest for one reason alone. But the unusual flexibility of it's wonderful motor is one big factor. Think of it—the Haynes can crawl along at less than one mile per hour on high and on the self-same gear can carry you over the ground at a speed of more than a mile a minute. From a standing start it can pick up a speed of thirty miles an hour in seven and one-half seconds.

Haynes Comfort and Beauty

You must actually see and sit in a Haynes to fully take in its beauty of body and real solid comfort. Upholstered throughout in deep hand-buffed leather on suspension springs, it presents an interior of restfulness and refined beauty. Outwardly its stream line body is modeled on lines of sleekness and unbroken symmetry, a picture of dignified grace.

And Finally—Newell Service

Service after you buy is important. The experienced owner can tell you just how important it is and how it will increase your pleasure and satisfaction. Right here the Newell Motor Car Company wish to assure every buyer of a Haynes Automobile that they stand squarely behind it at all times and in every reasonable way.

You are cordially invited to inspect the Haynes. A phone call or postal is all that is needed.

KNOBLOCK WITH COLE CO.

INDIANAPOLIS, March 18.—One of the most important developments of recent years in the motor car industry is that which has just been announced by the Cole Motor Car Co., telling of the affiliation with that organization of A. F. Knoblock, for 12 years vice president and general manager of the Northway Motor Manufacturing Co. division of the General Motors Co. Mr. Knoblock has assumed full charge at the Cole factory. His position is that of general manager.

KING FACTORY MEN PLAN BIG CAMPAIGN

Sales Manager R. P. Bishop, Advertising Manager H. C. Bradfield and District Manager H. N. Adamson of the King Motor Car Co.; all met in St. Louis this week and made extensive plans for the exploitation of the eight-cylinder King in this territory with W. L. Johnson of the Johnson Automobile Co. distributors for this automobile in Missouri and Southern Illinois.

Mr. Bishop was en route from Detroit to the Southwest; Mr. Bradfield was en route to Detroit from the Southeast, and Mr. Adamson came to St. Louis for the purpose of establishing offices with Mr. Johnson. Stanley McCloskey, from the King Motor Car Co.'s service department, will also take up headquarters in St. Louis at the Johnson Automobile Co. and travel Mr. Adamson's territory from this point.

Mr. Johnson is particularly well pleased with the plans outlined by Mr. Bishop. While the King has enjoyed business in this territory it has not been up to the standard that the company would like to secure. Increased factory production facilities and a larger allotment of cars for this territory enables Mr. Bishop to now make plans that will give the King an opportunity of increasing its already established prestige in this territory.

Along with the lines outlined by the King factory for the exploitation of the world's leading popular priced eight-cylinder motor car, Mr. Johnson also has made plans which insure the future of this car in the St. Louis field. He has surrounded himself with a highly efficient sales force for his wholesale and retail business. His factory arrangements are of such a nature that he is brought in closer touch with the manufacturing organization than any representative who has had the King in this territory before. While Mr. Johnson has a wide latitude, it is explained that Mr. Adamson's presence almost continually with headquarters here in St. Louis will argue well for King customers.

"We are particularly well pleased with the Johnson Automobile Co. as our St. Louis connection," Mr. Bishop declared Saturday. "It may be a surprise for the public to know that we have been figuring with Mr. Johnson for the King line for over one year. His business standing, however, did not permit us with the facilities we had to give him a contract that would enable him to represent the King as we would like to have him do and as he wanted to do. However, we have now increased our manufacturing facilities and also our production. We are in a position today to enter the St. Louis market in the right way and we will back Mr. Johnson up so that the King will be as big a factor here as it is in Chicago, Minneapolis, Dallas or other big distributing points.

"The eight-cylinder King is today the leader of its class. This is proven by the representation we have throughout the country. In fact, we have come to a position where we do not have to solicit representation, the car brings applications itself.

"The King, besides being the second eight-cylinder car to enter the American market, holding leadership in its class today, is the lightest seven-passenger automobile manufactured except one.

"It has more body length and less car length than is possible on any other car, except a four-cylinder of equal cylinder dimensions—and such a motor would not pull such a car. It has the most accessible motor built, except really simple fours. It develops more horsepower per pound of car weight than any motor car built in this country. The King is the easiest riding car built in this country. It has the best legroom in the driver's compartment in any seven passenger car, except one, and that car has a wheelbase of 142 inches. These are all exceptional statements, but Mr. Johnson can easily prove them.

"Our Mr. Adamson will be in continual touch with the situation in St. Louis in so far as sales are concerned, while Mr. McCloskey, a service man in whom we have implicit faith, will be ready to render efficient factory service right here in St. Louis."

3400 r. p. m. Chalmers Means Gallant Going Over All Kinds of Roads

The swift, silent breathing of the unique engine of the new 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers is faster than that of any other car on the road.

Without gasp or throb, this weird, aluminum-lunged beast inhales a mist of gasoline through the tiny nostril in its carburetor so rapidly that it can spin its motor at the supreme velocity of 3400 revolutions per minute.

High engine speed in a racer means just one thing—track-burning car speed.

But the high-speed engine of the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers means automobile attributes not measured in mere speed alone.

It means the whole gamut of performance most desired by men and women who demand more from a car than a beltful of racing records.

Chalmers engineers have translated superlative engine speed into the composite boon of pick-up, poise, and power.

The versatility of this vehicle has won it the vigorous O. K. of every person I know for whom it has performed.

The 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers does everything a car should do. It wrings 18 miles of gallant going out of every gallon of gas, a mile a minute if you're keen for speed.

Always there is the feeling of velour beneath my accelerator foot.

This car has the liveliness of a spirited mare, with a Pullman-like stability that keeps your back-seat passengers from rattling around like peas in a pod, which happens in so many other light, fast cars.

This able Six is heavy enough and so finely poised that its four wheels stay always on the ground, with direction as straight as a bullet.

By transforming this car's superabundance of brute might into all-round performance, Chalmers engineering has saved you from $150 to $200 worth of fuel per year.

So it's a sane and sensible buy from every slant—and the smart ones whose sense of values hasn't been blunted by prosperity are dropping around with their check-books.

$1050 Detroit.

VESPER IN DALLAS

F. W. A. Vesper, president of the Vesper-Buick Auto Co., spent a portion of last week in Dallas, Tex., and while there was guest and one of the speakers of the Dallas Automobile Club at their monthly dinner, and also appeared before the monthly meeting of the executive committee of the Chamber of Commerce and Manufacturers' Association, and addressed them on the automobile trade situation.

In early years of the automobile industry, Mr. Vesper was stationed in Dallas as the southwestern Buick representative, and renewed acquaintances while making a combination business and pleasure trip.

Hot Water Each Morning Puts Roses in Your Cheeks

To look one's best and feel one's best is to enjoy an inside bath each morning to flush from the system the previous day's waste, sour fermentations and poisonous toxins before it is absorbed into the blood. Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken each day leave in the alimentary organs a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not eliminated, form toxins and poisons which are then sucked into the blood through the very ducts which are intended to suck in only nourishment to sustain the body.

If you want to see the glow of healthy bloom in your cheeks, to see your skin get clearer and clearer, you are told to drink every morning upon arising, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless means of washing the waste material and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Girls and women with sallow skins, liver spots, pimples or pallid complexion, also those who wake up with a coated tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, others, who are bothered with headaches, bilious spells, acid stomach or constipation should begin this phosphated hot water drinking and are assured of very pronounced results in one or two weeks.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs very little at the drug store but is sufficient to demonstrate that just as soap and hot water cleanses, purifies and freshens the skin on the outside, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the inside organs. We must always consider that internal sanitation is vastly more important than outside cleanliness, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do.

Women who desire to enhance the beauty of their complexion should just try this for a week and notice results.—Advertisement.

GOOD ROADS; GOODRICH

"American motorists will reap an immense benefit from approkimately $250,000,000 expended last year on highway construction," said Manager Dold of the B. F. Goodrich Co. "The big national highways of which we have been reading so much are, in my opinion, only the forerunners of a network of good roads that will have a tremendous effect on increased motor and tire sales. Automobile owners should not overlook the important part played by the Goodrich Touring Bureau in promoting more and better highway building. Tire owners will realize a tremendous amount of additional mileage per casing this season due to good roads While this big saving will come to the tire owners individually—tire sales will increase materially, nevertheless, on account of the new fields opened up and the increased sale of automobiles.

PAIGE

The Standard of Value and Quality

You Must Place Your Order Now If You Want "Immediate Delivery"

Once again, we must urge you to act quickly in placing your order for a Paige Fairfield seven passenger "Six-46."

Don't delay. Don't put the matter off one day longer than is absolutely necessary if you would avoid disappointment later on.

Already the factory is flooded with orders for this wonderfully popular model.

Despite the fact that our manufacturing facilities have been tripled, we are facing an immediate shortage of Fairfields, and the spring retail season is only a few weeks off.

Just stop for a minute and consider the significance of the statement when we tell you that, so far in 1916, we have marketed more seven passenger cars than any other manufacturer in our price class.

Also, ponder over the fact that this month we shall ship approximately 25 solid train loads of the Fairfield model exclusively.

Last year, you will remember, there was a long Paige "waiting list."

Hundreds of people delayed their purchases until the last minute—and were then compelled to accept sixty and ninety days delivery—or compromise on a "second best."

So, be fair to yourself. Protect your own good interests. Go to the Paige dealer—place a cash deposit in his hands—and make sure that you will receive the car of your choice.

It is by no means our purpose to "stampede" motor car buyers into early or ill-advised purchases, but we know that a shortage is coming and offer this information in a sincerely helpful spirit.

And now let us say a word about the car itself.

First and foremost, we want to remind you that the Paige Fairfield "Six-46" is a tried and proven success.

When you buy a Paige "Six-46" today, you are buying a car that has passed the experimental stage. You are buying a car of known quality—known ability.

In a word, the "Six-46" is an eminently safe automobile investment.

It is a good car—not merely because we say so—but because its owners have conclusively established this goodness in the gruelling tests of more than a year's actual road work.

Here, then, is one substantial reason for the overwhelming demand which the "Six-46" enjoys. And there is another—a basic reason which has made this record possible.

Time and time again, we have stated our policy of scrupulously avoiding any expression in Paige advertising which might savor of exaggeration or misrepresentation. We make an honest product and we propose to sell it in an honest way.

But, facts are facts, and we boldly and fearlessly claim that the Paige Fairfield "Six-46" represents more actual dollar-for-dollar value than any other motor car on the market.

If this appears to be a broad statement we invite you to check us up by inspecting the car, riding in it, and conducting any comparative investigation which you may care to make.

Understand, we do not claim to make the only good motor car, nor do we ask you to believe that our Fairfield is the best American make.

But we do most emphatically insist that the "Six-46" offers a greater value for its price—$1295—than any other automobile produced in this country or abroad.

Furthermore, you will heartily agree with us if you will permit the Paige Dealer to give you one thorough demonstration—just one.

But, please don't forget—you must act quickly. Get your order in now—before it is too late.

King's. "Hell's Hinges," "Daphne and the Pirate," and two comedy films.

American. "The Moral Fabric" and three other films.

New Grand Central. "York State Folks."

The Park Theater Players, headed by Mary Boland, who was formerly leading woman for John Drew, will present the only new item on this week's theatrical bill here, "Along Came Ruth," which has not been played in St. Louis before will be their offering tomorrow night.

This play is a study of rural New England life, by Holman Day, and was produced in New York for a part of last season by the Savage forces. The story is that of a young girl who, moving into a little town, upsets established customs and ideas there. Several character studies of Yankee types are among the characters assigned to different members of the supporting organization.

At the Shubert Theater tonight Guy Bates Post will make his third appearance, and it is announced, his final one here, in "Omar the Tentmaker." This beautiful Persian drama of romance, poetry and philosophy was twice seen here last year and won high praise both for its scenic setting and for the fine playing of the smaller roles, as well as the greater ones. Louise Grassler, who played the supporting role of Shireen last year, will again appear in that role.

Next Sunday night's attraction at the Shubert will be "A Pair of Silk Stockings," with Sam Sothern heading the cast. This comedy deals with society life and has situations which have been described as decidedly brisk, but free from serious offense. William Faversham's fine production of "The Hawk" is to return to the Shubert April 24.

"A Chinese Honeymoon," which closes at the Park Theater tonight, will be sung by the Park Opera Company at the Shenandoah Theater this week. One of the notable features of this show is the singing of the "Little Bug" ballad by Frank Moulan.

"The Birth of a Nation" will remain until Sunday, April 2, at the Olympic, when it will have to make way for Julian Eltinge in "Cousin Lucy." Eltinge is supported, in this play, by Dallas Welford, Jane Oaker and Mrs. Stuart Robson and a good-sized chorus. Jane Oaker is the former Miss Minnie Peper, member of a well-known St. Louis family.

Julia Dean, who appeared at the Shubert Theater last fall in "The Law of the Land," will appear at the Columbia this week in "Marie-Rose," a war melodrama, heading the vaudeville bill. The play is based on the incident of the execution of the British nurse, Edith Cavell, by the Germans in Belgium. Mme. Eleonora de Cisneros of the Chicago Grand Opera Company has second place on the bill, and other features are the Sixteen Navassar Girls and a sketch, "Cranberries," by the author of "The Meanest Man in the World," a popular vaudeville offering of last season.

Old Kentucky, a Havlin's Theater favorite of bygone years, which has never lost its appeal to a large class of playgoers, will be played at the Princess Theater.

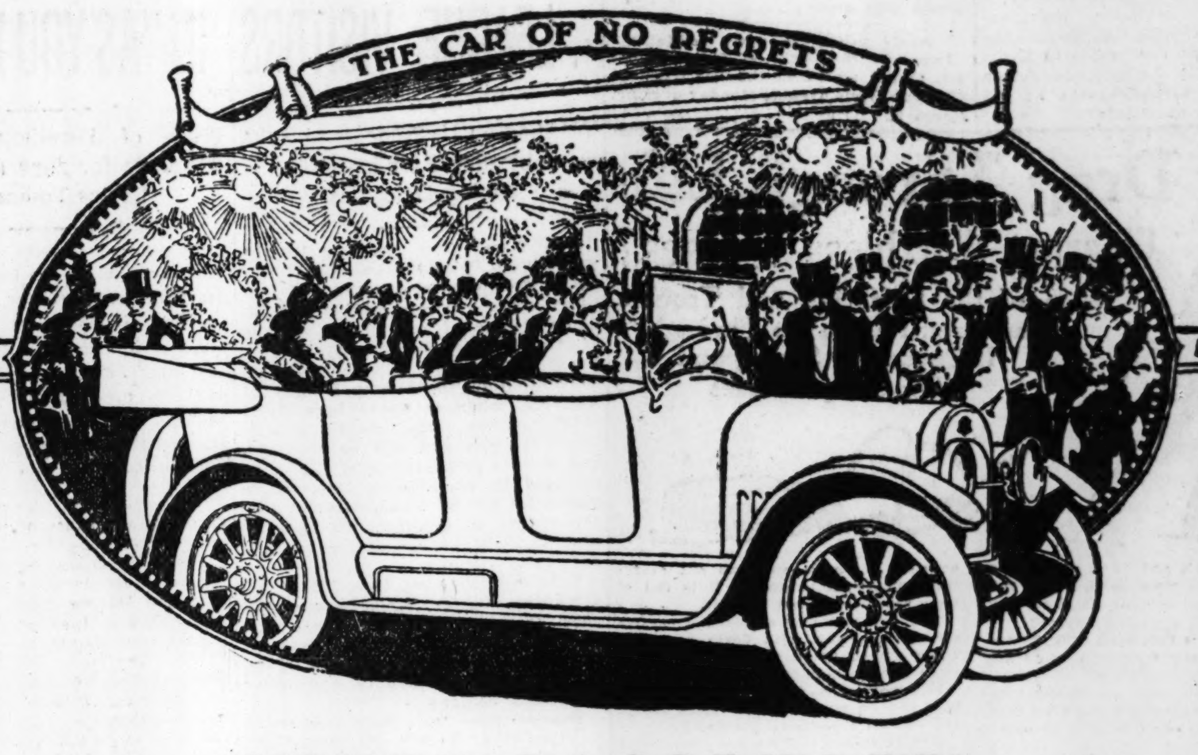
LIBRARY MEMORIAL TO WOMAN

Alabama University Alumni Expected to Lead Subscription of $100,000.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 18.—The building of a library addition to the University of Alabama, to be known as the Amelia Gorgas Memorial Library, has been proposed by Prof. George G. Brownell, chairman of the University Library Committee, and approved by the university authorities. The plan is to raise the money by popular subscription, led by the alumni or the institution. It is also proposed to supply it with a collection of books surpassed by few school libraries in the country, the whole to represent an expenditure of about $100,000.

The woman for whom the library is proposed as a memorial was the librarian at the university for a generation, having been connected with the institution for the greater portion of her life. She was the wife of Gen. Gorgas, once president of the university, and mother of Surgeon-General Gorgas of the United States Army.



THE CAR OF NO REGRETS

SEVEN-PASSENGER

KING EIGHT CYLINDER $1350

120-INCH WHEELBASE

Nothing "Medium" But Its Price

In mechanical superiority, riding luxury, coach design and world-wide prestige, it is distinctly a "salon" car

PIONEER of its class, the KING occupies the unique position of being purchased "in spite of" its moderate price, as well as because of it. Those who would willingly pay more than is asked for the KING find the necessity gone when confronted with this car's remarkable performance and luxury.

The seven-passenger KING embodies improvements and refinements in eight cylinder construction which could be offered only by a company that has had its "Eights" in operation all over America and in thirty foreign lands for over a year, there being more KING eight cylinder cars in owners' hands than any other make save one.

Aluminum pistons of special King design, the latest advance in automobile engineering, are a feature of this car. They increase engine power and resist carbon.

In congested city traffic the KING Eight will creep along in "high" and when an opening comes, dart away with locomotive speed at the movement of a finger. Sudden hills are taken with a hum instead of a throb, and with scarcely ever a change of gears. Simplicity and ease of operation make it the ideal car for women who drive, and its extreme economy of fuel, oil and tires is only another proof of high engine efficiency.

Will you be content with less than a KING?

GIRL ASKS $30,000 DAMAGES

Action Results From Disappearance of Kirkwood Woman's Diamond Ring.

Suit for $30,000 damages for alleged slander in behalf of Emily Klamberg, 15 years old, was brought yesterday in the Circuit Court at Clayton against Dr. L. D. LeGear, a wealthy stock medicine manufacturer, and his wife, Margaret LeGear. All the parties reside in Kirkwood, though Dr. LeGear conducts a manufacturing establishment at 713 Howard street, St. Louis.

The suit describes the disappearance in February of a diamond ring worth $400, belonging to Mrs. LeGear. At the time the girl was employed as a maid in the LeGear family, and the cause of action is based on aleged remarks by Mrs. LeGear, imputing the theft to the maid. The disappearance of the ring was reported to the Sheriff's office, but no arrest was made.

Why Drag Through Life

Wearing Worthless Trusses?

90% of the Suffering and Trouble Ruptured People Go Through Is Caused by Spring and Leg-Strap Trusses

Aren't you sick and tired of wearing trusses you can't make hold, which you can't feel safe in, or which hurt so they scarcely give you a minute's peace?

Don't you know that such contraptions will sooner or later let your rupture get the best of you?

Don't you know they are almost sure to cripple you up, so you won't be able to keep at work, won't be able to make a living?

Aren't you afraid they'll gradually let you get so bad that sooner or later you'll have to face a dangerous operation?

Aren't you willing to make a 60-day test—without having to risk a cent—and see for yourself what a relief it is to get rid of such misery-causing makeshifts?

No More Belts, Leg-Straps or Springs

We have found a way to hold any man's rupture without harmful pressure, without any belts or spring around your waist, without having to wear leg-straps.

It is our guaranteed rupture holder.

It is as big an improvement over elastic and spring trusses and so-called "appliances" as the modern locomotive is over the first steam engine ever built.

60 Days' Trial to Prove It

We have so much faith in it—have seen what it has done for so many others—that we are willing to make one especially for your case and send it to you for 60 days' trial. Willing to give you plenty of time to see for yourself just how good it is.

If it doesn't keep your rupture from coming out or from bothering you in any way, then you can send it back and it won't cost you a single penny.

It is the only thing we know of for rupture that you can get on long enough trial to make sure; because the only thing good enough to stand a long and thorough test.

All About It in Free Book

Don't send any money. Just write for our free book—cloth-bound, 20 separate articles, 96 pages—and find out everything you want to know. It is full of facts never before put in print.

It shows just why operation is nearly always a gamble with death and why those who manage to live through it often have to keep on wearing a truss.

It exposes the fakes and humbugs—puts you on guard against being fooled and against throwing money away.

And it tells all about our guaranteed rupture holder—the famous Cluthe. Shows how simple it is. How it instantly and automatically protects you against every strain, so your rupture can't be forced out. How it provides the only way ever discovered for overcoming the weakness which is the real cause of rupture. How it has brought complete cure in thousands of cases that seemed almost hopeless. How it is waterproof and will hold in the bath. How you can get it on 60 days' trial and how little it costs if you keep it.

Explains the care and attention we give you and why, because of our long experience and thorough knowledge of rupture, we are successful in cases that would utterly baffle your local truss fitters.

Write for the book today. That will take only a minute. But it may free you from trouble and worry for the rest of your life.

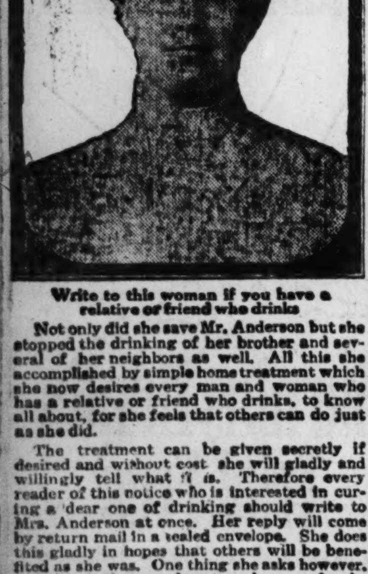
Wishes To Tell You FREE How She Stopped Her Husband's Drinking

By all Means Write to Her and Learn how She did it.

For over 20 years Jas. Anderson of 10 Pearl Ave., Hillburn, N. Y., was a confirmed drunkard. His case was about as bad as it could be, but a little over twelve years ago his devoted wife, after years of trying, finally succeeded in stopping his drinking entirely.



Write to this woman if you have a relative or friend who drinks

Not only did she save Mr. Anderson but she stopped the drinking of her brother and several of her neighbors as well. All this she accomplished by simple home treatment which she now desires every man and woman who has a relative or friend who drinks, to know all about, for she feels that others can do just as she did.

The treatment can be given secretly if desired and without cost. She will gladly and willingly tell what it is. Therefore every reader of this notice who is interested in curing a dear one of drinking should write to Mrs. Anderson at once. Her reply will come by return mail in a sealed envelope. She does this gladly in hopes that others will be benefited as she was. One thing she asks however, and that is that you do not send money for she has nothing to sell. Simply address your letter with all confidence, to Mrs. Margaret Anderson at the address given above and she will reply by return mail in a sealed envelope.

Easy Way to Remove Freckles and Eruptions

Some women have skin of such texture they occasionally are annoyed by the sudden appearance of freckles, slight eruptions or fine lines. March winds usually play havoc with skin of that kind. In such cases, if one will procure an ounce of common mercolized wax at any drug store, apply a little of it before retiring, like cold cream, she can easily overcome the trouble. When the wax is washed off next morning, flaky skin particles come with it. The entire outer cuticle is removed in this way in a week or so, with all its defects. No bleach could so effectually remove freckles or blemishes. The new surface is smooth, clear, fresh looking. No pain or inconvenience accompanies this simple treatment.

In case of wrinkles which sink beneath the outer skin, a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½ pt. witch hazel, makes a face bath which is wonderfully effective.—ADV.

PAGEANT OF OLD PLAYS FOR DRAMA LEAGUE VISITORS

Washington U. Students to Take a Leading Part in Entertaining Delegates.

An Elizabethan Pageant by the students of Washington University and a program of exhibits and lectures under the auspices of the St. Louis Center of the Drama League of America, are being prepared for the entertainment of the national convention of the Drama League of America, when it meets here April 25-28. At the same time the Shakspeare tercentenary will be observed, and for the presentation of the plays included in Washington University's pageant a special stage, as much like the stages of Shakspeare's time as possible, will be constructed on the university campus.

It is expected that from 250 to 300 delegates of the Drama League will come from other cities. These will include some of the foremost dramatic critics, actors and actresses in the country, drama students and other interested persons.

Branch Here Has 800 Members.

The local branch of the Drama League has a membership of 800, having become within the last year the strongest branch in the country, according to Prof. Otto Heller of Washington University, its president. Dr. Heller says it hopes to have 1000 members by the time the convention meets and will work to give St. Louis a more prominent place on the theatrical map.

The picturesque old plays, in which the greater part of the university student body will participate either as principals or as costumed spectators in the "pit," are "The Revesby Sword Play," "Old Wives' Tale" and "The Hue and Cry of Cupid," the last a short masque by Ben Johnson.

The stage, to cost $800, will be built against the middle part of Busch Hall, presenting a facade 45 feet long, and the same height as Busch Hall. There will be a small inner stage with movable curtains and a wider middle stage under a canopy, or "heaven." Two ornamented columns supporting the canopy will separate the middle stake from the projecting outer stage or apron. The action on the outer and middle stages will be viewed from three sides by the audience seated on the level of the campus.

Plays to Be Presented.

"The Revesby Sword Play," performed entirely by men, is really a sword dance with swords interpolated. The characters are the fool, the six sons who both dance and speak and the girl "Cicely," who has only a speaking part, and as many others as are needed for the Morris dances. The play is a rollicking dance-drama, requiring skill and agility.

"The Hue and Cry After Cupid" is a court masque on elaborate lines. There is one male role, "Vulcan." The other roles are all taken by women. The verses are short but the dancing parts are many and require beauty and grace. "The Old Wives' Tale" is based on a number of uncommonly interesting folk tales, skillfully woven together.

Drama League Program.

That part of the program being arranged by the Drama League of St. Louis will be given at the Buckingham Hotel, with the exception of a Shakspearean exhibit at the Public Library. There will be a Little Theater exhibit in charge of Dr. Clinton J. Masseck, assisted by C. Raymond Johnson of the Chicago Little Theater and Prof. Gilmer of Tufts College.

There will be a college dramatic exhibit in charge of Prof. Melville Burke of Yeatman High School and Prof. Allan Abbott of the Teachers' College, New York.

The "movie problem" is to be discussed by Chairman Brenton of the National Board of Censorship, Walter Richard Eaton and Miss Elizabeth Hunt.

Discussion of the work in drama being done by colleges will be introduced by Prof. Archibald Henderson of the University of North Carolina, biographer of Bernard Shaw, who will present a report of his investigations as chairman of a Drama League Committee.

The high-price-of-seats question probably will be discussed by Prof. Richard Burton of the University of Minnesota.

There will be a reception by the Wednesday club, and a banquet at which the principal speaker is expected to be William Faversham, who was recently seen in St. Louis in "The Hawk," and who is to return in the same play for the week of the convention.

Dr. Heller states that arrangements have been made for financing Washington University's part, and that an effort is being made to raise $2500 to defray the expenses of the Drama League's program. The president of the Drama League of America is Percival Chubb, leader of the Ethical Society of St. Louis.

Central Y. M. C. A. Indoor Circus.

Central Y. M. C. A. will give its second annual indoor circus, March 30 and 31 and April 1, in the "Y" gymnasium, Grand and Franklin avenues.

The actors will be mainly members of the association, but a fencing drill by girls of the Y. W. C. A., an exhibition of high horizontal bar work by the Olympic Turners and a Bohemian army drill by a Bohemian society under the leadership of M. Bogdan will be features of the

1000 AMATEURS TO AID MISS ANGLIN IN "AS YOU LIKE IT"

Work of Enrolling Men and Women for June Production Begins Tomorrow.

One thousand amateur actors, men and women, are to be enrolled by the Pageant Drama Association, beginning tomorrow, to support Margaret Anglin in her performance of "As You Like it," in Forest Park the week of June 4, which is to constitute St. Louis' observance of the Shakspeare tercentenary—the 300th anniversary of the poet's death. The actual anniversary is April 23.

The enrollment, which will be conducted in the office of the association, room 513 Security Building, will be on the plan which was followed in obtaining the much larger cast of the Pageant and Masque of St. Louis, which was staged at the foot of Art Hill on the nights of May 28, 30 and 31, and June 1, 1914. The cast of the Pageant and Masque numbered approximately 6300, all amateurs. Fifteen professional actors are to take the principal supporting roles in "As You Like It."

William W. LaBeaume, who was chairman of the Productions Committee of the Pageant and Masque, holds the same position in the coming Shakspeare celebration. He has sent enrollment blanks to dramatic clubs, dancing classes, Washington University, St. Louis University, the City Club, the Town Club, the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A., the Young Men's Hebrew Association and other bodies whose members are likely to be interested. Preference will be given, it is announced, to persons with previous experience and training.

Circulars, which have been sent out with the enrollment cards, tell of the plans for the production of "As You Like It." These plans were described, in as much detail as had then been determined, in an article, illustrated in colors, in the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine of Jan. 16.

In the Elizabethan prologue, 300 to 400 players, representing the common people of Shakspeare's time, will come to view the play, and before taking their seats, will indulge in dancing and merry-making.

The attempt will be made to recruit about 600 men and women for these parts, so that not all need appear on any one evening. In the same way, 400 actors will probably be recruited for the 200 foresters and courtiers who will appear in the action of the play proper.

The group of Elizabethans will be organized first, beginning with the dancers. To lead the dance, 65 men and 65 women are needed at once. Cecil J. Sharp of London, teacher of old English folk dancing, is to train the 120 dance leaders in Morris dancing, country dancing and sword dancing, in the afternoons and evenings of next week, beginning Monday, March 27. The place for this training will be announced soon. Chairman La Beaume said yesterday that he was looking for a hall without a polished floor. The leaders instructed by Sharp will be expected to aid in training others.

The place of presenting the play will be a natural amphitheater smaller than that of Art Hill, and more feasible from the standpoint of the human lungs and the human ear. The location is in the center of Forest Park, some 500 feet east of the old Pagoda Lake, and midway between that lake and the Park Department stables. Seats for 10,000 persons can be provided here. Under a city ordinance, the management is authorized to charge for seats, but the scale of prices, and the number of free seats, if any, have not been announced.

You don't want a slow remedy when your stomach is bad—or an uncertain one—or a harmful one—your stomach is too valuable; you mustn't injure it with drastic drugs.

Pape's Diapepsin is noted for its speed in giving relief; its harmlessness; its certain unfailing action in regulating sick, sour, gassy stomachs. Its millions of cures in indigestion, dyspepsia, gastritis and other stomach trouble has made it famous the world over.

Keep this perfect stomach doctor in your home—keep it handy—get a large fifty-cent case from any drug store and then if anyone should eat something which doesn't agree with them; if what they eat lays like lead, ferments and sours and forms gas; causes headache, dizziness and nausea; eructations of acid and undigested food—remember as soon as Pape's Diapepsin comes in contact with the stomach all such distress vanishes. Its promptness, certainty and ease in overcoming the worst stomach disorders is a revelation to those who try it.—ADV.

*Ex-dividend during the week. Total sales for the week, 4,966,900.

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, March 18.—The Evening Post, in its copyrighted weekly financial review today, says:

"The main conclusion to be drawn from the rather noteworthy action of the Stock Exchange, this week, is that it testifies its belief in our own country's prosperity. If there had actually been any evidence of a turn for the worse, when the readjustment from last autumn's extravagant speculation was under way, during January and February, there would have been no recovery. But, so far as the visible and tangible signs of the day were witness, practically everything has pointed to continuance of financial and industrial revival in this country. This is the fundamental basis for the present market.

"Undoubtedly the character of the news has contributed. There are many uncertainties and possible complications ahead of us in the Mexican adventure. But the relations with the de facto Mexican Government are such as only good luck and the whirligig of time could have brought about; after the tangle in which a certainly somewhat inapt Mexican policy seemed, two years ago, to have entangled us. Our army is in Mexico; but the recognized Mexican Government admits the propriety of its presence.

The Submarine Question.

"So, too, passenger ships are being sunk on the coast of Europe. At least the suspicion of a new decourse to the program of murder on the high seas has attached itself to the episode; and even on the supposition that the ships had struck a floating mine, it was clear enough who was responsible, and to what extent the humane international prohibitions of the second Hague conference had been flouted. But on top of this, the Grand Admiral, whose name can hardly fail to go down in history in close association with the story of maritime assassination, is suddenly dismissed from his office. Along with this, the news from the Western battle line has continued such throughout the week as seemingly to guarantee that there will not be another 1914 march on Paris.

But whether one concludes that the stock market rose this week because of the Mexican and European news, or that it rose in spite of them, the larger fact remains that the home finacial and industrial situation was properly enough reflected. This is, in fact, only one strongly qualifying consideration in this present movement of prosperity—namely, that too much which is purely ephemeral in its character should be accepted as permanent.

"Precisely what change in the situation will unavoidably occur when the war and its abnormal influences end, is a question on which very high authorities disagree. But the fact on which there is no disagreement is the hazardous character of markets, which assume that there will be no reactionary movement. Thus far, both our financial and industrial markets—the steel trade and the 'munition stocks' possibly being an exception—have moved on the whole with exemplary prudence. This is notably true of the general run of staple industries, including the agricultural markets, and af the better class of securities on the Stock Exchange.

One Fortunate Element.

"One fortunate element in the matter is that the public at large takes counsel of its doubts as well as its hopes. Another is, that the large financial interests, which in 1901 and 1906 were themselves swept along with the tide of speculative excitement, have themselves on this occasion applied a restraining hand.

"In the reckoning of possible results, both from the Mexican expedition and the destruction of the passenger ships, the stock market has apparently recognized that the balance of probability, in view of the surrounding incidents, inclines strongly to the reassuring side. Perhaps it was disposed to draw more positive conclusions from the Von Tirpitz announcement, for the reason later dispatches showed the sinking of the Tubantia to have aroused into a fury of denunciation, against Germany's submarine exploits, the very nation on which Germany most depends for its communication with the outside world.

"That the bitter antagonism of Holland should have been the first fruits of the Berlin declaration regarding fresh activities of the sort is no doubt most interesting as a proof that the whole program of sinking passenger ships without warning was as stupid as it was atrocious. But, taken along with the news from the German Admiralty, it also gives some ground for believing that Germany herself may have begun to see the truth.

"What further bearing that very fact may have on the general outlook for the war—when considered along with the failure, up to date, of the great demonstration at Verdun—is a consideration which at least has not yet encouraged pessimistic views on the Stock Exchange.

"Prices on the favorite shares showed fair gains on the week. Yesterday's market was uncertain."

LONDON REVIEW.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch and the New York Evening Post.

LONDON, March 18.—The very apparent undercurrent of quiet optimism on our market is probably due first of all to the unbroken front maintained by the French army at Verdun. But it also appears to be based on what we regard as accumulating evidence of the economic strain upon Germany, and on recognition of improved financial conditions here.

So far as regards your situation some reserve is shown regarding the Mexican expedition. It is feared in some quarters that this will turn out to be a more formidable undertaking than your people have yet realized. It is, perhaps, not surprising that conjecture as to German influences in this matter should be heard; but nothing is actually known to confirm them.

There have probably been no definite arrangements made with Mr. Morgan, regarding the manner of utilizing American securities now under official control here. The essential fact is, that while mobilization of American bonds continues, the plan is likely to make further progress. The Government appears to have wisely abandoned the mobilization of your ordinary shares—preferring to allow public selling to proceed directly on the Stock Exchange, thereby contributing towards maintenance of a free London market for American securities.

The Bank Statement.

"The bank's loss of gold this week was largely due to demands from Argentina. These are likely to continue heavy during the next few weeks, but you will probably find that London is not losing greatly on balance. As the season for large shipments of produce from your own country approaches, the difficulties surrounding the problem of financing them is quite appreciated. But our hidden gold resources, as frequently stated, are available for the purpose of meeting exchange requirements to a greater degree than is generally supposed.

"Strongest reasons prevail for believing that the rate of New York exchange on London has been thus far sustained without any encroachment on these resources.

"Naturally, our market is watching the news of subscriptions to the pending fourth German war loan. If war expenditure at the present rate is to be covered until the end of March, these subscriptions must aggregate $2,750,000,000. To cover the credits actually voted by the Reichstag, they must total $3,700,000,000.

"In the numerous arguments contained in the German newspapers received here, urging support of the loan by investors, there seem to us to be a trace of the idea that failure of the loan to achieve complete success would be a national disaster. This has caused some prophecy of early peace, based on the assumption that Germany will recognize the inevitable. But such predictions are premature."

CATTLE PRICES SEEK SLIGHTLY LOWER LEVEL

Week's Range Is Downward on All Grades—Hogs Also Are Easier.

RECEIPTS AT NATIONAL STOCKYARDS.

Cattle	16,611	15,190	12,835
Hogs	54,994	53,116	63,617
Sheep	6,866	11,045	14,017
H & M.	3,685	3,888	4,712

Cattle receipts last week were heavier than the previous week. The run did not carry many choice to prime cattle, but the supply ran largely to fair to good grades. Best steers sold at $9.35, with the bulk selling from $7.50 to $8. The market was 25c lower in the initial session, but regained the decline and closed steady to 10c lower generally. There was a good movement on the steers offered, and sellers encountered a very satisfactory market from the outset of the week. Clearance of steer cattle was good.

The butcher supply was a shade heavier than previous week also. The general run consisted of cattle that had been in the feed lots but a short time and no prime kinds were available. Best heifers sold up to $9.10, with the bulk going from $7 to $8. The few choice heifers offered went at steady prices generally, but when the quality fell below that the market was lower and especially on the yearling grades and here 25c to 40c declines were numerous. This, however, was the most severe break in the cattle trade last week. Cows sold well. The choice kinds went at $7.50, with medium kinds selling from $5.75 to $6.50. Best cows were steady, with spots in the medium grades that might have been 10c to 15c lower, but these cases were extremes. Vealers were steady all week, with a top of $10.75 until late, when buyers commenced to hammer prices and the market dropped $1.

Stocker Supply Is Light.

Stockers and feeders were again in light supply. The demand was again strong and urgent, and selling forces encountered no trouble getting the satisfactory outlet looked for. Best steers sold at $7.85, with the major portion of the cattle finding sale in a range of $6.50 to $7.50. There was good clearance for the week.

Southern cattle receipts last week were more liberal than they have been in a fortnight. The supply came mainly from the territory of the South and East, with only a light showing from Texas. The Texas contribution consisted of two cars of steers that sold to local killers for $7.65, and were considered 10c lower than the previous weeks' sales. A load of native Texans sold for $8.40, the best price paid this season for Texas steers.

Although the receipts of hogs each day were but moderate the market was on the decline the greater part of the week, and the close showed a loss of 30c on the best hogs and 50@75c on the pigs and lights. Some of the little pigs that were strictly good did not suffer more than 25c. Southern hogs of all weights, unless they could be guaranteed as strictly corn fed, were extremely dull sale.

The top of the market at the opening of the week was $10.10 and the bulk sold at $9.75@9.95, but later in the week the top of the market was down to $9.80, and the bulk went at $9.40@9.70. Hogs with a little weight as well as quality were the ones that met with the strongest demand and brought the highest prices at all times. Good heavy hogs were a little scarce.

The mixed and plain grades as a rule sold at $9.50@9.65, best grade of lights weighing less than 165 pounds went at $9.40@9.85, fair grades $8.50@9.25, best pigs under 125 pounds $8.25@9, fair grades $7.50@8.40, and the common kinds at $6.50@7.35, according to quality. Rough packers sold all week at $8.75@9, and showed no material change.

Sheep Receipts Are Light.

The market was active all week, with prices on the advance and towards the close lambs were selling on the highest basis ever known on this market for wool lambs. About a half of a deck went to one of the city butchers at $11.60, while two double decks sold at $11.55, while quite a lot of good lambs went at $11.25@11.50, with fair grades at $10.50@11.15 and the culls and others that were but little better than culls went at $8.00@10.00, according to quality.

Yearlings were rather scarce and sold at $9.00@9.25, as a rule, while the sheep went at $7.50@8.00 for slaughtering purposes, but the supply was far from being sufficient to met the demand. A big string of light-weight Western ewes went at $7.50. Bucks, as a rule, sold at $6.75@7.00, but there was not many on the market.

COTTON PRICES STEADY DESPITE LIGHT EXPORTS

Trend for the Week Shows Optimistic Tone—Spot Values Are Firm.

Last week's figures covering the movement of cotton favored the bear traders. Exports were not up to expectations, and there is apparently nothing in sight to indicate any betterment so far as this class of business is concerned, other than the rumors that Japan has been buying heavily in the South.

Shipping news does not lend any hope of more ocean freight room than has been available for some time past. One rumor, coming from Galveston, stated that freight room for Liverpool was engaged at $2.50 per hundred, a decline of about $1.75 per bale from previous quotations. But, whatever the export movement may be, there was a decidedly better demand for the actual cotton all the week.

Sales of some good-sized blocks of cotton were put through at very satisfactory prices, and holders of cotton showed a decided willingness to sell at the full prices offered.

New Orleans, where good sales were made all week, advanced quotations steadily until, on Saturday, middling in that market was quoted at 12c. This was an advance of 31 points from the closing figures of the week before. This cotton is presumably for Eastern mills, where business is booming. The movement for the week is uniform, however, small it may be, and the interior receipts, and the port receipts, and the exports, are proportionate.

Movement Is Good.

For the week ending Friday the movement was as follows:

	1916.	1915.
Interior receipts, week	$ 89,273	$ 139,804
do season	5,181,287	7,036,312
Interior stocks	1,019,109	1,008,044
Port receipts, week	98,704	227,227
do season	5,740,783	8,700,993
Port stocks	1,426,461	1,486,290
Exports, week	99,061	254,050
do season	3,770,177	6,142,876

The movement into sight is, in round figures, 9,650,000 bales, compared with 12,353,000 bales on the same date last season. This leaves in the uncounted towns and on farms about 4,100,000 bales, compared with 4,750,000 at the same time last year. This stock added to the interior counted towns' stock anad the port stocks make up the total available supply of cotton in the United tSates some 6,545,000 bales, compared with 7,244,000 bales at the same time last season.

The difference in value of cotton this year and last, brings the total exports, measured in money, to within, probably, $50,000,000 of the value of last year's exports, and this difference in selling price, coupled with the like sum realized from the cotton sold to domestic mills, goes a long way toward making up any deficit the farmer might otherwise face.

The report covering the consumption of cotton in this country during the month of February was issued last Monday; it showed a total consumption, exclusive of linters, of 540,711 bales, compared with 463,307 during February, 1915. Of this quantity 302,174 bales were consumed in cotton-growing states, compared with 254,618 in 1915. Linters consumed in February were 98,010, compared with 29,404 in 1915.

On Feb. 29 there were held in manufacturing establishments 1,985,045 bales, compared with 1,654,169 in 1915; in public storage and in compresses 3,971,316 bales compared with 4,075,453 in 1915; there were 31,982,499 cotton spindles active in February, compared with 30,748,949 in 1915. This February consumption brings the total for this season up to 3,615,365 bales, compared with 3,050,187 in 1915. The average consumption for the season so far is about 80,000 bales more per month than during last season, being so far 516,500 bales per month, compared with 436,000 in 1915. The total consumption last year, for the 12 months ending July 31 was 5,598,798 bales, or an average of 466,567 bales per month.

The future markets were rather featureless all last week and the net changes were small. The small loss at the close of the previous week was overcome Monday, and thereafter fluctuations were not wide and the market closed yesterday at about the closing figures of Monday—12.13 to 12.14 for July contracts in New York.

The spot markets showed more strength and quotations at the end of the week were higher in all markets and drawing away from a parity with futures. The principal markets were quoted as follows: Galveston, quiet, middling, 12.15c; New Orleans, steady, 12c; Mobile, steady, 11.69c; Savannah, steady, 12c; Charleston, steady, 11¾c; Norfolk, steady, 11.81c; Wilmington, steady, 11⅝c; Houston, steady, 12.20c; Augusta, steady, 11.75c; Memphis, steady, 11.88c; Little Rock, steady, 12c; St. Louis, steady, 12c.

Wheat Crop of Illinois Is in Bad Shape.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., March 18.—The condition of the wheat crop in Illinois is serious, according to B. M. Davison, secretary of the State Board of Agriculture.

"We won't have more than a 50-per-cent crop in Illinois," said Mr. Davison today. "The open winter is responsible. Conditions in Illinois are representative, in my opinion, of those in Missouri, Indiana and Iowa."

Thirty-one per cent of the wheat sown has been killed, according to the board's estimates, and the living wheat is only 66 per cent of normal.

Possibilities of peace gave a fresh downward swing yesterday to the local wheat market. Quotations closed nervous, 1c to 1¼@1⅜c net lower, with May at $1.03⅝@1.03¾, and July at $1.02½. Corn finished ⅝c to ⅞c, and oats off ½c.

From start to finish, wheat prices were ruled chiefly by selling which resulted from European suggestions that the end of hostilities was perhaps not altogether remote. Liverpool dispatches asserted that rumors of peace were regarded lightly by British traders, but the fact that quotations from Liverpool showed a notable decline was generally construed here as more accurately indicating the real outlook. Bulls failed to derive any help from the absence of verification that German ships had been seized by Brazil. Dry weather complaints sent by Texas and Oklahoma were likewise ignored, and so also were serious crop damage reports from Illinois and other central states.

Week-end profit-taking by shorts led to some slight rallies in the wheat market, but none that seemed to be of a lasting sort. About the only export sale heard of was 100,000 bushels in Chicago. Signs were that statistics Monday by cable would prove bearish, and that the United States visible supply total would show little change, as compared with a falling off of nearly 2,000,000 bushels at the corresponding time last year.

Corn was bearishly affected by the decline in wheat. The market felt the influence also of the meagerness of shipping inquiry. Oats weakened with other grain. Export transactions were said to have been confined to Canadian oats.

Sentiment Bearish.

At the moment sentiment in wheat has worked into a bearish position, as receipts at primary points are piling up at an unusual rate for this season of the year, and the movement from first hands is almost as large as the first flush wave of wheat on a new crop. The present condition is the reverse of last year, when after a wide decline in values in February, prices recovered nearly all the loss in late March and April, on unusually heavy exports and continued falling off in primary receipts and the visible supply.

There is this difference in the market as compared with last year, however. Now sentiment generally at the bottom of a 30c decline is bearish, while a year ago prices were high and sentiment bullish. Then the market fooled the trade by going all to pieces in May and June. Now the question arises whether the market will not again fool the trade and take the opposite tack than expected and advance while everybody is playing for a sure decline.

There is this much in the situation. The winter wheat acreage is some 11 per cent less than last year, and the crop indicated 115,000,000 bu less; the season of crop damage is at hand, and there has never been a year when the crop "killers" have not had their inning. It is also unlikely that the spring wheat crop will equal anywhere near last year's record of 356,000,000 bu, and some of the foreign countries may show a much reduced wheat harvest.

Should the war continue over the summer and any change in the world's harvest take place on the next crop, there are many who think wheat near a dollar is a perfect investment. Should the war end and the Dardanelles be opened to Russian shipments, where two crops have been raised without natural outlets for exports, these same traders believe wheat will sell at 80c. Russia's surplus is the factor on which traders are bearishly figuring while selling wheat on the present peace rumors.

The Doctor's Advice

By Dr. Lewis Baker

The questions answered below are general in character, the symptoms or diseases are given and the answers will apply in any case of similar nature.

Those wishing further advice, free, may address Dr. Lewis Baker, College Bldg., College-Ellwood Sts., Dayton, O., enclosing self-addressed stamped envelope for reply. Full names, and address must be given, but only initials or fictitious name will be used in my answers. The prescriptions can be filled at any well-stocked drug store. Any druggist can order of wholesaler.

"L. E." writes—"I feel tired, headachy, constipated; have awful complexion, coated tongue, and feel nervous and can't sleep.

Answer—Overwork, worry and constipation will cause your blood to become diseased and impoverished. You need a good laxative and blood purifier. Start taking three-grain sulpherb tablets (not sulphur) at once.

"Wonder" asks: "Please tell me what is the cause and trouble with me. My condition is deplorable. I am weak and nervous. My tonsils are sore, and I notice bumps on my head. I have high fever sometimes and am pale and distressed looking."

Answer: Your blood is in a diseased and vitiated condition as indicated by the eruptions on your skin and the high fevers, etc. I suggest that you use Elixir Chin-cea compound to purify the blood and drive the disease out of your system through the natural eliminative organs. Obtained of druggists in sealed eight-ounce bottles with full directions.

"Mabel" asks—"What may I do to get rid of dandruff?"

Answer—The use of plain yellow minyol is the best treatment for removing dandruff. It cleans, soothes and vitalizes the scalp and promotes natural growth of hair. It is greaseless and contains no alcohol.

"Obese" writes—"All I eat seems to turn to fat, and I am over in weight about fifty pounds. May I reduce safely?"

Answer—Five-grain arbolone tablets reduce weight if taken regularly and persistently. They reduce by degrees and are perfectly harmless to the system. Obtain from druggists in sealed tubes with full directions.

"Ben F." asks—"How am I to get relief from rheumatism? Is there a cure?"

Answer: You may get relief and permanent help from the use of the following: [illegible] drams iodide of potassium, 4 drams sodium salicylate, ¼ oz. wine of colchicum, [illegible] oz. comp. essence cardiol, 1 oz. comp. fluid balmwort and 5 ozs. syrup sarsaparilla comp. Mix and take a teaspoonful at meal time and again before going to bed. I have prescribed this mixture in thousands of cases, and it has given wonderful results.

"Sick" writes—"I am slowly recovering from a long spell of sickness and I am thin and have no strength."

Answer—For a good, general invigorating tonic and flesh producer there is none better than three-grain hypo-nuclane tablets, which you may obtain at any well-stocked drug store. Take them with your meals, and in a short time you should notice an increase in weight. Your health will be much improved and your color good.

"Worker" says:—"I am a very hard worker and am obliged to be in and out of doors constantly. I take colds regularly as a result, and sometimes I cough severely for days. What may I use to break up a cold quickly?"

Answer: The best thing you might use to break up a cold and at the same time rid the system of inflammation would be a simple syrup made from 2¼ oz. concentrated essence mentho-laxene and one pint of plain sugar syrup. Take regularly until relieved. When you feel a cold coming on, start using this simple laxative tonic, cough syrup for immediate and permanent benefit.

"Max" asks—"What can I take to give me strength of body and power of mind? I seem to have lost all vigor and I'm dull, tottery and weak. I am restless and sleep very little. Have pains in my head and just a general 'down and out' feeling possesses me. Cannot stand late hours or stimulants any more. I'm only 35, so I know it isn't old age."

Answer—Your physical and mental strength need the aid of a good tonic and builder. Three-grain cadomene tablets should tone your nerves and get your system and brain in good, active condition. You are possibly the victim of overwork, worry or loss of sleep.

"Busy" writes—"I have had pains in my back for months. Now I have headaches and chills and fever all the time. My complexion is awful, and I have swelling of the feet and my eyes are bloodshot and have lost their brightness.

Answer—Don't be alarmed over your condition. You have kidney trouble, but with the continued use of balmwort tablets you should receive immediate and permanent relief. These tablets come in sealed tubes with directions—ADVERTISEMENT.

NEW HIGH SCHOOL FOR MAPLEWOOD TO COST $60,000

Grade School for Negroes to Be Built and Richmond Heights Is to Have More Rooms.

A $60,000 fireproof high school, containing modern equipment throughout, a grade school for negroes and the addition of four rooms to the Richmond Heights school will be built in Maplewood by next September, when the fall school term begins, as a result of the passage at the special election last Tuesday of the $100,000 bond issue for schools. Repairs to the equipment of two ward schools also will be made.

Arthur J. Crum of 7370 Maple avenue, president of the Maplewood Board of Education, said the proposed high school would contain 10 or 12 rooms, and added facilities for teaching an additional 600 pupils.

The building will be a two-story brick.

Crum said that the Maplewood schools were so overcrowded by the attendance of 1350 pupils that half-day sessions affecting 250 pupils were held. The present schools are the Valley, at Manchester and Oakland avenues, which has a capacity of 14 rooms; the Sutton, at Cambridge and St. Elmo avenues, with eight rooms, and the Richmond Heights, four rooms. The present high school quarters, accommodating 155 pupils, are at the Valley School.

The school bonds, according to Crum, will be issued in 30 days. They will mature in 20 years, yield a 5 per cent return, and will be sold to the highest bidder.

The new high school will have a large assembly hall, a gymnasium, modern laboratories for chemistry, botany and physiology, and spacious quarters for manual training and domestic science.

It is planned to purchase a site large enough so that an athletic field can be had adjacent to the school.

The Richmond Heights addition will cost $10,000 to $12,000, Treasurer A. J. Prendergrass declared. The negro grade school, to be located near Clayton and Hanley roads, will cost several thousand dollars. At present negro children receive instruction in a church in this locality.

CIRCULAR EXPLAINS WHY COAL WILL ADVANCE 10 CENTS A TON

Rise Said to Be Due to Wage Increases, Explosive Costs and Mine Supplies

St. Louis dealers yesterday received a circular sent out by Illinois operators giving reasons why coal prices must advance in 1916 and stating that the total minimum advance in the production cost of coal after March 31 will be 10 cents a ton.

Edward Devoy, in an interview printed in the Post-Dispatch 10 days ago, following the adjustment of the wage scale by operators and miners in conference in New York, said that the wage increases granted would bring about an advance of at least 10 cents a ton in the cost of coal at the mines, increasing the annual coal bill of St. Louis about $800,000.

Dave Wilson of O'Fallon, Ill., in a communication to the Post-Dispatch, estimated that the miners would receive an increase of only 5 cents a ton, and charged that the operators or dealers would pocket the other 5 cents a ton.

In the cirucular received yesterday the estimate is that the wage increase will be 6 cents a ton, of which 3 cents goes to the "diggers," 2 cents (estimated) to the men working on a daily wage scale, and 1 cent (estimated) to the men doing yardage and "deficiency" work. The circular adds that the extreme advance in the cost of explosives alone will add not less than 1 cent per ton, and other materials and supplies, including rails, steel, copper, lumber, lubricants, cement, repair parts, general supplies, etc., not less than 3 cents a ton, making the total of 10 cents a ton.

The Kansas City Life Insurance Co.'s Annual Statement Shows Healthy Growth.

The annual statement of the Kansas City Life Insurance Co., one of the progressive Western insurance companies, has just been issued. It is particularly interesting to Western people because it indicates that the East by no means has a monopoly on successfully managed insurance companies. The statement shows that during 1915 the percentage of net increase in its insurance account to new business was 52 per cent. The new insurance issued averaged $72,000 for every working day. Its volume of new business in Western territory during 1915, including Kansas, Missouri, Colorado, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Northern Texas, proves the generous recognition given a Western company by Western people.

FRENCH LOOK FOR A GREATER GERMAN BLOW AT VERDUN

High Command Does Not Believe Present Lull Indicates Abandonment of Effort.

DUTCH SHIP TORPEDOED

Large Vessel Sunk at Mouth of Thames, Crew and Two Passengers Being Saved.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch and the New York World.

(Copyright, 1916, by Press Pub. Co.)

PARIS, March 18.—Although confident the moment of the greatest danger in the defense of Verdun has passed, the French high command is keeping everything in readiness to repel yet another formidable onslaught by the army of the Crown Prince. There yet has been no evidence that German Generals have abandoned their stupendous effort for the capture of the Meuse fortress, and the French staff steadfastly refuses to place undue importance upon the numerous checks suffered by the enemy recently, such as the breakdown of five successive attacks on Fort Vaux Thursday night.

Continuous activity on both railroads behind the German lines has been a source of gratification for the French long-distance gunners and bombing aeroplanes. For instance, this afternoon's communique mentions the shelling of the Apremont-Vigneulles road along which the German troops were marching northward toward the Verdun sector, and aerial attacks against the railroad stations at Conflans and Metz, both of which are centers of distribution for reinforcements of men and munitions headed Verdunward.

The Germans doubtless are aware that the two positions they must now seek to capture are the strongest in the whole system of the defenses of Verdun—Fort Vaux and the height of L'Homme Mort. While either of these strongholds, one east and the other west of the Meuse, remain in French hands, Verdun is safe.

While a considerable percentage of the German heavy guns must have become disabled through sheer wear and tear during the interminable bombardment which has raged uninterruptedly for a whole month, beginning Feb. 19, signs are not wanting to demonstrate that fully 3000 pieces still are pouring a torrent of shells on both banks of the Meuse. Staff officers have expressed the opinion that more than 15,000,000 shells of all calibers have fallen in that period in the 40-mile crescent from Malincourt to Fresnes.

Tonight's statement from the War Office says:

"West of the Meuse the enemy bombarded quite violently the region of Bois Bourrus and Montzeville. On the right bank, after intense artillery preparation, the enemy delivered in the course of the day a series of partial attacks between the village of Vaux and the wood south of Haudromont farm. Arrested by our curtain of fire, he was not able to reach our trenches at any point.

"Our batteries were very active along the whole front, particularly in the Woevre, where our fire caused the explosion of a munitions depot in the Moranville wood.

"In Lorraine the Germans attacked our positions in the region of Thiaville. Some enemy detachment which had succeeded in penetrating our advanced trench were immediately driven out by a counter attack."

DUTCH STEAMER TORPEDOED; ALL OF CREW SAVED

Nine Men Are Wounded When 6000-Ton Vessel Is Sunk in Estuary of Thames.

LONDON, March 18.—The Dutch steamer Palembang of 6674 tons gross was torpedoed at 10:30 this morning near Galloper light in the Thames estuary. All the members of the crew were saved. The Palembang was bound from Rotterdam for Java.

A dispatch to Lloyd's Weekly News from Harwich says that the 55 members of the crew of the Palembang and two Dutch men who were passengers were landed there. Nine members of the crew were injured by the explosion. No lives were lost. Although the ship remained afloat only seven minutes, the injured men were placed in boats with the remainder of the crew.

The passengers and several members of the crew declare the submarine fired three torpedoes.

Twenty members of the crew later reached the Sailors' Home in the Eastern district of London. One of them, in a statement, said nobody could say with certainty whether the vessel had been torpedoed or had struck a mine. Nobody, he said, saw a submarine or even a periscope. The weather was fine and very clear. The Palembang was steaming along fairly rapidly when the slight explosion, quickly followed by two of greater intensity, occurred. The vessel listed immediately and sank headforemost.

The State Department had asked Gov. Johnson to investigate.

BERLINERS STAND 8 HOURS TO GET POUND OF BUTTER

Four Families of 14 Persons Wait Fifteen Hours Without Getting a Supply.

BERLIN, March 18.—It takes on the average eight hours of time to get a pound of much-coveted butter in Berlin—that is, eight hours "standing in line," according to statistics of the Vossische Zeitung.

The statistician gives the record of 85 families, 31 of these living in the workingmen's section of Berlin, embracing 370 persons. To get what's called "standing butter" the 85 families "stood" a total of 305 hours. The "standing" produced 38¼ pounds. Four families, embracing 14 persons, stood 15 hours without results.

GIRL IS OFFERED 510 JOBS

She Is Immigrant and Is Threatened With Deportation.

BOSTON, March 18.—Delia Burke, an immigrant, will have a choice of more than 500 jobs if she is permitted to remain in this country. An announcement today that the girl was in danger of deportation because of fears that she would become a public charge, was followed by 510 calls upon the immigration officers by persons anxious to solve their servant girl problem.

A good home and good wages were promised by all the inquirers. The young woman is ill at a hospital and, pending her discharge from that institution, no disposition of her case will be made.

FUNSTON WANTS TO MAKE USE OF MEXICAN RAILWAYS

Request Forwarded to Carranza, Whose Followers Are Expected to Oppose It.

CONDITIONS IMPROVE

Tension Near Tampico Relieved and No Outbreaks Are Reported Elsewhere.

WASHINGTON, March 18.—A request from Gen. Funston that the American forces be permitted to use Mexican railways for troop transportation was forwarded late today to Consular Agent Rogers for presentation to Gen. Carranza at Queretaro.

Officials here closely associated with the de facto Government are understood to believe that Carranza will be strongly advised by many of his followers against granting the request on ground that to do so might arouse public sentiment against the de facto Government, seriously affecting the control it has established over the native population.

A development which was regarded in Mexican quarters here as likely to do much toward assuring continued cooperation between the members of the de facto Government and the American troops was an announcement by the War Department that the orders under which the expedition entered Mexico did not authorize occupation of any Mexican cities. It was said the purposes of the expedition did not necessitate any such occupations which border dispatches have indicated might be misunderstood by the Mexican public.

The State Department's advices from below the border which included a dispatch saying conditions were improving about Tampico, were laid before President Wilson personally tonight by acting Secretary Polk. Polk also conferred late in the day with Eliseo Arredondo, Gen. Carranza's Ambassador-designate, but neither official would discuss the subject of their talk, except to say that reference had been made to shipment of munitions which the de facto government is anxious to get to Vera Cruz from New York.

One dispatch from Gen. Funston tonight said Gen. Pershing had reported finding a supply of corn, alfalfa and beef at an unnamed point in Mexico. Whether the provisions had been left by fleeing Villa troops or were purchased or requisitioned by the American commander was not stated.

Only One Mexican Railroad in Shape to Serve Troops.

EL PASO, Tex., March 18.—Only one of the two Mexican railways penetrating the territory where the American columns are operating, is in shape to serve Americans if permission is granted. Both have terminals in Juarez.

Villa, by burning a bridge on the Mexican Northwestern Railway at Corralitos, effectively cut communication via that line. It would require about two weeks to reconstruct this bridge after materials are shipped. The Mexican National line could probably supply all wants of the present columns, according to railroad men.

DODD'S MEN GAVE BIG YELL AS THEY CROSSED INTO MEXICO

Private of Seventh Cavalry, Injured by His Horse and Ordered Back, Tells of Departure.

EL PASO, Tex., March 18.—A private in the Seventh Cavalry, of Col. Dodds' command, is the first of the American troops to return from Mexico. He was ordered to Fort Bliss Hospital. When seven miles in Mexico, his horse fell with and then kicked him. He revealed that Col. Dodd's column went into Mexico at 10:30 o'clock Wednesday night.

"We had assembled at High Lonesome, on the American side," he said, "and had been joined by part of the Tenth Cavalry. The word went down the line when we passed the monument which marks the international boundary, and a wild cheering yell rang out along the coumn. Then we lapsed into quiet.

"When my horse went down I rolled in the dust and he kicked me. I was ordered back to the border, so I took a condemned horse and we plugged along back into the United States.

TWO SUITS FILED FOR PAYMENT FOR WEDDING MUSIC

Noel Poepping Takes $20 Bill Against Mrs. P. B. Little to Justice Court.

Two suits to recover payment for music played at weddings were filed against St. Louisans last week.

While it is a recognized principle of law and ethics that he who dances must pay the piper, the issue is not so clearly defined as to the organist or the fiddler who plays the Mendelssohn or Lohengrin wedding march to the accompaniment of which the blushing bride and the scared bridegroom march down the aisle together.

Mrs. P. B. Little of the Bellevue Apartments, 14 North King's highway, was sued Friday in Justice Gazzolo's court by Noel Poepping, an orchestra leader, for $20 for music furnished by his orchestra early in December, 1912, at the wedding of Mrs. Little's daughter, Josephine, to Louis Henry Ingraham of New York.

Mrs. Little, when asked about the suit yesterday, refused to discuss it further than to say that the matter had been adjusted.

Poepping said he would not talk of the suit and that he regretted that it was necessary to file it.

Charles Galloway of 3459 Halliday avenue, an organist, sued in Justice George Wellman's court for $50 for playing wedding music June 5, last, at the marriage of Richard E. Hinrichs, formerly associated with Henri Chouteau in the brokerage business, and Miss Marjorie Peper Bell, wealthy daughter of Nicholas M. Bell of 4442 West Pine boulevard. The suit is directed jointly against Mr. and Mrs. Hinrichs.

Galloway told a Post-Dispatch reporter that he was engaged three weeks in advance and that he played a rehearsal the night before the wedding in St. Peter's Episcopal Church, Lindell boulevard and Spring avenue. On the night of the wedding he played a half hour recital preceding the marriage, and then a wedding march.

Galloway said there was no stipulation as to the price, but considered his services for such an occasion worth $50. Six months after the wedding, being unable to collect the bill, he said he wrote to the bride's father but received no answer. At the Bell residence it was said that Mr. and Mrs. Hinrichs were in Hot Springs, Ark. The couple reside at 6251 Delmar boulevard.

U. S. TROOPS MOVE FROM CASAS GRANDES TOWARD MOUNTAINS

Reports From Western Chihuahua Agree Villa Is 100 Miles South of Americans.

PERSHING MAY RADICALLY ALTER PLANS THIS WEEK

Failure of Villa to Make Stand Likely to Bring Change—U. S. Decision Not to Occupy Cities Relieves Tension—Censorship at Columbus Tightened.

EL PASO, Tex., March 18.—The first phase of the American expedition into Mexico, the rush along Villa's dim trail to the endangered Mormon colonies, was an accomplished fact tonight—completed, according to reports reaching the Columbus base, without the firing of a shot by the Americans. The second phase already was beginning, it was indicated here, as the Americans turned from Casas Grandes to resume their night marches under the brilliant moonlight toward the rough mountain slopes where it is known Francisco Villa already had preceded them with more than 100 miles start.

Warning that this second act in the chase might not pass without fighting against bandits was implied in a new and more stringent censorship imposed at Columbus. Further leakage of military news, the censor said frankly to the American press, would be likely to cost soldiers' lives.

There was brief excitement today at Columbus. From across the hot, dusty Mexican border, two soldiers on stretchers were brought into the camp. Both were calvarymen. Excitement passed when it was learned that one had been thrown from his horse, injuring his leg, while the other, who at first was said to have been shot in the abdomen, was found to be suffering from a well-known form of stomach ache.

Carranza Garrisons Tranquil.

When Washington announced that the American column did not intend to occupy cities, a menace to Mexican national pride was removed. The Carranza garrisons, which have been passed by the marching Americans, and which, therefore, are now in the Americans' rear or on their flanks, continued tranquil, reports to El Paso indicated.

Gen. Gabriel Gavira at Jaurez, commanding the territory through which for three days, the Americans have been marching, himself announced that for a time the situation as reported to him had been very delicate and even serious. With evident relief, he said, the crisis had passed. This crisis, it is believed, reached its height last night when couriers dashing into Casas Grandes announced with careless enthusiasm that the American troops would enter that city at midnight. Gen. Gavira wired immediate orders to his troops not to permit this. Dawn showed the long lines of cavalry horses just outside Colonia Dublan, their troopers dismounted and in camp at rest.

Villa Has 100-Mile Start.

Villa was located today with some degree of definiteness if weight of evidence counts in pinning down his rapid shifts. From several sources Constitutionalists received messages, all of which placed him in approximately the same portion of western Chihuahua. These dispatches had him nearly due south of the American column's present known positions, and close to the Sierra Terahumare Mountains, so close to them, in fact, that if his reputation as a fox holds good during the American chase, he should be able to make a puzzling disappearance in these ranges with a very few hours' hard riding. By all accounts he is more than 100 miles ahead of the Americans, about the same distance he has been out of their reach for a week, but with one possibly important difference, that while heretofore the Americans have been riding on a somewhat cold trail, they are now nearing ground which Villa very recently passed over and where they may have practical opportunity to test the temper of the rural Mexicans from whom they might receive valuable information.

PERSHING MAY ALTER METHODS

Failure of Villa to Make Stand Will Bring Change by End of This Week.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, March 18.—Failure by Francisco Villa, on whose trail more than 4000 United States troops are marching, to make a stand and fight before the end of next week, will radically alter the methods so far employed by the comander of the expedition. What Gen. Pershing's plan is, however, has not been revealed.

When Gen. Pershing led the expeditionary force over the boundary line into Mexico the juncture of troops which has taken place near Casas Grandes was planned with little expectation that Villa would be sighted before this time. It was realized that the only chance for the Americans to catch him at that stage of the operations was that he would gather his forces and resist their advance.

There is reason to believe that he has retreated as the Americans advanced and that now he is somewhere in the Galeana district south of Casas Grandes, in the environs of which a cavalry force under Col. Dodd rested today. Information received by Gen. Funston from Chihuahua indicated that he was at Colonia Gracias, but most of those reporting contented themselves by placing him in the mountains from 50 to 100 miles south of Casas Grandes.'

To force Villa to fight or to trap him in one of his many hiding places has now become the object of Gen. Pershing's plan. Whether Villa will risk a fight or play out the role of a common fugitive is a subject for speculation.

Unofficial reports that Gen. Pershing did not insist upon sending into Casas Grandes the advance cavalry force, after Gen. Gavira had intimated such entry would meet with resistance, lowered the tension at Gen. Funston's headquarters. Gen. Funston was convinced that Gen. Pershing would not pass his troops through any Mexican town unless he regarded it as a military necessity, but in case of such necessity he was prepared to indorse the action of the man on the spot.

Gen. Pershing continued his reports of routine development of the plan, none of his reports dealing with an unexpected or unusual incident.

Unusual activity displayed by the de facto Government of Mexico, in adding to its stores of ammunition, is shown in reports from customs officers at different border ports of entry.

Shipments of rifle ammunition in car load lots by express have become common in the last three weeks. This apparent haste was being shown before Villa raided Columbus. Much of the new ammunition entered at points on the New Mexico and Arizona border and was supposed to be intended for the troops in Sonora.

Since the Columbus raid 5,000,000 rounds have passed through the Customs House at Laredo.

Army men estimate that there is more small arms material in Mexico now than there has been for many years.

Outlaws and Carranza Troops Fight Near Torreon.

EL PASO, Tex., March 18.—North Central Mexico, in the neighborhood of the former Villa stronghold of Toreon, and about Durango, today furnished reports of a battle between small bands of outlaws and Constitutionalist troops. One of the bandit organizations in the fight near Torreon was credited with being a Villa organization. Nothing was available tonight upon the outcome of this fight.

COL. DODD'S TROOPS SAID TO BE WITHIN 30 MILES OF VILLA

Reports Received at Douglas, Ariz., Say Bandit Is at Colonia Garcia, Near Casas Grandes.

ALL QUIET IN SONORA

Horses of Raider's Band Reported to Be in Bad Shape and Men Suffering From Lack of Food.

By CLAIR KENAMORE.
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

DOUGLAS, Ariz., March 18.—Reports that Col. Dodd with his cavalry was within 30 miles of Villa were received here today with the greatest joy. Col. Dodd has been stationed here for a long time and citizens have been betting that he would catch up with Villa before any other commander. It has been said generally that sending a ponderous column of all arms to catch Villa was like sending an elephant to catch a jack rabbit.

"Pretty lively elephant, what?" say the exultant cavalry officers.

Col. Dodd did not leave Hachita until after the main column had departed from Columbus. Gen. Pershing rode by automobile from Palomas and conferred with Dodd and then the Colonel rode away. One of his regiments, the Seventh, is white, and the other, the Tenth, is black. The Colonel is on the other side of 50 and looks a bit shaky for such a hard ride, but he is reputed to be an excellent horseman.

Villa Said to Need Mounts.

The report places Villa at Colonia Garcia, which is about 30 miles, a little west of south of Casas Grandes. This point is in the Sierra Madre Mountains and not far from the crest.

Advices to the Mexican officials at Agua Prieta today from Gen. Luis Gutierrez at Chihuahua City said Villa was at San Geronimo, making for Namiquipa. This point is 40 miles farther south and east and still east of the mountain crest. It was the Mexican information that Villa had cached a large amount of ammunition near Namiquipa several months ago and that he is greatly in need of it now. Gen. Calles also was informed that Villa's horses were in bad shape, that he had been unable to renew his mounts since leaving Columbus and that his men had had little food.

Entrance of Col. Dodd's men was through Culbertson's ranch, which is one of the big properties of this section. More than 40,000 head of cattle graze on its range and it is always one of the points that is guarded when Mexican bandits are near the border.

Quiet Prevails in Sonora.

Gen. P. Elias Calles, Governor of Sonora, said today that he was sure Carranzista troops would assist the American troops in pursuit of Villa in all reasonable ways. He said that in his State there was no feeling against Americans.

There is at Douglas no evidence of any movement of troops from this point into Mexico. Much of the transport necessary for such a movement has been taken away from the units stationed here and sent to Columbus and Hachita for the use of the invading columns. It is a foregone conclusion that Col. Dodd's wagons are far in the rear.

Pershing's Force Follows Close to Route of Dodd's.

EL PASO, Tex., March 18.—Something of the course of the dash on Villa's trail was revealed in reports received here today. The Hachita column made its actual start from San Bernardino Ranch, about the size of a large county where the State of New Mexico extends some 40 miles south of the general east and west line of the American border. By using this American territory for the first part of their advance from Hachita, the flying cavalry command of Col. George Dodd, was able to strike into Mexico at the shortest distance from Casas Grandes, a little more than 60 miles of march.

The main column, under Gen. Pershing, at Columbus, N. M., starting from a point considerably further north of Casas Grandes, did not go due south, but apparently veered to the westward to get into touch with the cavalry commands from Hachita.

Passed West of Guzman.

Reports here that Gen. Pershing's army intended to establish a base at Guzman were discontinued in dispatches that Guzman was still held by Carranza troops and that the American columns were marching about 25 miles to the westward. This would put them very close to the route of the cavalry command of Col. Dodd. Guzman is an important Constitutionalist garrison town, about 30 miles directly south of the point where Gen. Pershing entered Mexico and by going past it to the west no question of occupation was raised.

There is at least $100,000 now available in rewards for Pancho Villa's capture. Half of it has been offered by ranchmen in the northern part of Chihuahua.

The five Mexican newspapers of El Paso, which the police closed up within the last week, are expected to resume publication immediately. The police returned their type and forms yesterday.

ARMY GOODS IN RECORD TRIP

CHICAGO, March 18.—As an evidence of commercial preparations it was announced here today that a train load of motor trucks for army service had reached El Paso yesterday before noon, having left Chicago Thursday morning.

The average speed for the distance of 1466 miles, excluding terminal delay, was 30½ miles an hour for the train of 15 cars. All records were broken in the assembling of the trucks at the factory and in loading them for El Paso.

Approximate Whereabouts of American Expedition

Russian forces beyond Erzerum, which have been awaiting the development of operations on the Black Sea and in the Lake Van region to make their position secure against possible flank attacks by the Turks, have again resumed their westward march toward Sivas. Although the Russian advance is yielding a constantly growing number of Turkish prisoners, there is no reason to suppose that the Turks have begun to offer serious resistance to their pursuers.

According to unofficial reports, the large number of prisoners is accounted for by the Turkish discontent with conditions prevailing in the Turkish army, which has resulted in a growing disposition of the soldiers to surrender. In this connection, it is interesting to note that an exceptionally high percentage of officers have been taken prisoners. Some of them say they were unable longer to tolerate German control of the army.

The capture of Mamahatun (55 miles southwest of Erzerum, officially reported, shows that the Russian forces are within 60 miles of Erzinjan, on the road to Sivas. Sivas probably will mark the first resistance of the Turkish armies.

The next day 17 Turkish dead were found on the field. Our losses were one Indian soldier killed and one British officer and 16 men wounded."

VILLA BOASTED HE WOULD FORCE INTERVENTION, AMERICAN SAYS

Bandit Chief Told Prisoners United States Had Recognized Carranza and Must Pay for It.

EL PASO, Tex., March 18.—Villa boasted three months ago that he would froce intervention in Mexico by the United States, according to a story told here today by Harry Williams of Chihuahua, an American mining man. Willams asserted that he had heard Villa make the boast on Dec. 13 last, when he was a prisoner of the bandit.

"I was one of 39 Americans employed on the mining property of the Madero company," said Williams. "We were all arrested because the pay of the Mexicans working under us had not arrived from Chihuahua.

"Villa told us, 'I am going to force intervention by the United States in three months. The United States has recognized Carranza and must pay for it.' We were released the next day."

BANDITS SAID TO BE PREPARING FOR ATTACK ON PRESIDIO, TEX.

Carranza troops were reported to be co-operating with the American forces for possible defense against bandits.

LIGHT RECRUITING IS LAID TO PROSPEROUS CONDITIONS HERE

Those Who Enlist Now Stand Good Chance of Seeing Service in Mexico, Maj. Goode Says.

Maj. George W. Goode, in charge of the United States army recruiting headquarters in the Old Custom house, Third and Olive streets, said yesterday that he believed the light recruiting in St. Louis last week, despite the Mexican situation, was due to prosperous conditions in this city.

He said 110 men applied last week, and 37 were accepted for service. Yesterday's applications numbered only 17, while Chicago reported 600. Acting under instructions from the War Department Maj. Goode has reopened the recruiting stations at Cape Girardeau and Hannibal, Mo., that were closed about a year ago, and is preparing to open stations at Moberly, Mo., and Mount Vernon, Ill. Four stations are maintained in St. Louis. Maj. Goode said the new recruits stand a good chance of seeing service on the Mexican border.

The First Infantry, National Guard of Missouri, last week enrolled 65 out of 85 applicants. More than 200 men, including 20 who have seen service, registered with this regiment and promised to enlist if actual service is assured.

TAX BOOKS OPEN TOMORROW FOR PUBLIC INSPECTION

Board of Equalization, Appointed a Week Ago, Will Meet and Organize.

The tax books will be open for public inspection at 9 a. m. tomorrow. The Board of Equalization, appointed a week ago by Mayor Kiel, will meet tomorrow in the office of Assessor Schramm and organize.

The board is empowered to hear appeals made by taxpayers from the assessments that have been made on real or personal property by the Assessor. The board also may initiate investigation into the personal tax returns made in the form of affidavits by taxpayers.

The estimated assessment of property in St. Louis this year is $642,000,000, of which about $35,000,000 probably will be cut off by the State Board of Equalization, in reducing the assessment of bank stocks and surplus to 50 per cent of its value.

MAN TELLS HOW HE SOLD HEROIN TABLETS TO MISSOURI CONVICTS

Discloses Hiding Place of Habit-Forming Drugs, Which He Sold for 50 Cents Apiece.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., March 18.—J. H. Klein, a driver for the Jefferson City Transfer Co., who was arrested Thursday following the disclosures in Detroit, Mich., that an employe of a wholesale drug house had supplied habit-forming drugs for convicts in the Missouri penitentiary, tonight told in detail how he had sold drugs to the prisoners. He took United States detectives to a stable and showed them 1800 heroin tablets, which, he said, he had been selling to convicts for 50 cents each.

U. S. Can Avert Danger, Bishop Says.

DENVER, Colo., March 18.—Bishop Francis J. McConnell of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who arrived today with three missionaries from Mexico, declared that so long as the United States respects the sovereignty of Mexico, diplomatic relations would not be endangered. He said missionaries were not being withdrawn except for ill health. Mexico, he said, was ravaged by typhus, famine and poverty, and the hospitals are overcrowded.

NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT IS APPLIED TO CORRESPONDENTS

Officer at Columbus Says Several Writers Have Given Out Dangerous Information.

COLUMBUS, N. M., March 15.—New orders were issued today holding every newspaper correspondent accountable for his dispatches under the national defense act.

"The man who gets a scoop is an arch-criminal," said Maj. W. R. Sample, commanding officer of the Columbus camp today, "and I have evidence enough to bring several under the Federal law."

"American soldiers' lives already have been possibly endangered by violations of the censorship," said Maj. Sample. He said he received the new order from Gen. Funston.

"The betrayals of our movements have, of course, reached Villa, who naturally has taken means to make himself more elusive," he said. "This means the extension of our lines and extensions mean death to American soldiers from diseases and other causes. The American people should realize this, and above all the American papers should know that the more publicity the more deaths of American soldiers.

"If we ever got into a big war the efficiency of censorship would be a life and death matter to the nation. I regret to say that some men connected with the papers have carried matter censored here to other points to telegraph. This must and will be stopped."

Censorship Tightened.

Additional evidence of the tightening of the censorship was contained in the failure of the local weekly paper to print anything today, its regular press day, except legal notices. There was nothing else which the proprietor considered he had a right to print.

The local telephone company was warned that only officers or men of the army whose names were included in a list provided should be permitted to use the long distance lines. The only civilians permitted to use the toll lines are residents of Columbus or persons well known to the telephone operators, newspaper correspondents being barred.

Prosecution under the national defense law of 1911 will follow violations of the order. All correspondents were obliged today to register and present credentials at military headquarters. Maj. Semple, frankly informed them that their services would be of little value here and intimated that the censorship may be extended to other border towns.

Deming, N. M., was today included in the Columbus censorship area. Heretofore many correspondents whose dispatches were censored in Columbus have taken an hour's run to Deming, evading the censor. The price of this run jumped from $5 to $15 on account of the patronage.

Sixty factory mechanics who arrived today from Racine, Wis., to prepare motor trucks for field use, caused excitement when, after being aboard the train several hours without food, they jumped to the ground and with a shout started for the leading restaurant. Columbus forthwith became so excited that the military patrol was hurried to the spot.

A trainload of motor trucks arrived tonight. It is known that the American expeditionary force is taking every precaution against the disease which has followed long years of civil warfare in Northern Mexico. All along the border also medical officers of the United States Immigration Service are taking increased care to prevent the introduction into the United States of the smallpox, which is rampant in Mexico, particularly in the western part of Sonora.

Train after train of food, forage, clothing and other impedimenta of war has been unloaded here. Occasionally a creaking wagon train makes its dusty way out of the camp southward, but its destination is not announced. The enormous business at the camp is reflected in the amount of material handled by the telegraph office here, it being assured that the receipts here today were heavier than those of the El Paso office of the company, and this exclusive of War Department and press telegrams.

TAFT WOULD HAVE U. S. JOIN POWERS IN PEACE LEAGUE

Suggests in Speech Here That Time Probably Has Come for Us to Abandon Policy of Isolation—Tells of Our Added Responsibilities.

Prof. William Howard Taft of Yale, formerly President of the United States, in a 90-minute speech before the Contemporary Club at the Buckingham Hotel last night, made an appeal for greater preparedness to enable the country to take the part in international affairs which, in his opinion, events have called upon it to take.

Under the title "Our World Relations," he argued for a navy larger than that of any country which maintains a great standing army. He seemed to think it is time for the United States to abandon its policy of national isolation and suggested that perhaps America should become part of an international league which would throw its moral and military power against any nation that should precipitate an ill-advised war.

He pointed out that events of the last few decades have so interwoven America's interests with those of the world at large that we can no longer stand aloof, even if we wish to do so. The great seas are no longer an impervious fortification against foreign foes, he said, and our rapidly extended boundaries have brought new and difficult obligations.

Preparation for Eventualities.

Prof. Taft reviewed the history of the Monroe Doctrine and declared he was not one of those who say it is time the United States cut adrift from that policy. Both sides to the great European conflict have infringed upon our rights as a neutral; Mexico is a grave and menacing problem; everywhere we are confronted with conditions pregnant with danger. We must prepare for all possible eventualities.

The hotel dining room was crowded to capacity and the audience, men and women, listened to the speaker with the keenest attention. Notwithstanding the gravity of the matters he discussed, Mr. Taft constantly indulged in a vein of deft humor that brought rounds of laughter. He seemed to be in high spirits and several times prefixed some witty or sarcastic remark with an audible chuckle.

His opening remark brought laughter and applause. "I enjoy speaking in St. Louis," he said. "St. Louis is one of the few cities with whose political views in the past I have found myself in accord. That makes you very exceptional."

Our Future Program

"We are impressed," he continued, "with the importance of trying to determine what our national policies should be both in the direction of military preparedness and with preparation to take our part in international affairs immediately following the great war—when we are invited, as we undoubtedly will be—to help along some program which shall make such disasters less likely hereafter.

"Heretofore we have closely followed the directions of Washington in his farewell address, but we have followed them in one respect and not in another. Washington advised us to avoid entangling alliances, but he also advised us to prepare for a complete defense of our country and assured us that the best security for peace was to prepare for war.

"When Washington spoke those words his mind doubtless was full of the difficulties brought about by our treaty with France. We have followed his advice as to foreign alliances in many Senate resolutions and treaties. It is now an issue whether we are to continue that policy and assume an isolation with respect to the rest of the world which, it would seem, we have outgrown."

Prof. Taft drew a series of contrasts between the country of today and the country of Washington's time. He said that then we were five times as far from Europe in matter of time, as we are today and 25 times as far from Asia. Today we are a nation of 100,000,000 people, we are an Atlantic power, a Gulf power and a Pacific power, while Alaska has made us an Arctic power.

Alaska and its chain of islands stretching towards Asia, he continued, presents a separate problem. It is a land without fortifications and, practically, without armies. It is exposed to any Power which might wish to establish itself there with a view to a southern contest later.

Hawaii is a land with a Japanese population of 80,000. "We own the Philippines—up to date," he said, "with its 8,000,000 persons and its territory projecting under the eaves of Asia. I know there is much talk now as to abandoning the Philippines. I must decline to discuss that matter here, for much the same reason as that given by the estimable gentleman who wouldn't discuss the decline and fall-off of the Roman empire and the decline and fall-off of the Russian empire—because he couldn't explain it in the presence of ladies.

"At any rate we have them and we shall have them for at least four more years. For the time being they make us an Asiatic power."

We want our share of the Chinese trade, the former President went on although since the Russo-Japanese war the open door in the Far East seems to be closing. We like the Chinese trade, but we do not like the Chinese and we feel the same thing in respect to the Japanese. "We have in our color scheme," he added with a chuckle, "only black and white, but we do not seem to care very much for yellow and brown."

The former President declared that this attitude has created considerable resentment among the Japanese which is working from the ruling classes down into the common people. He repeated a remark made to him in 1907 by a distinguished Japanese statesman who said:

"We are grateful to the United States for waking us up, but we are a proud people. We have a patriotic self-conscience. We do not wish to colonize in your country, but we should like to feel we could do so if we wished. We resent it that America should admit the peoples of Southeastern Europe and exclude us. If you permit mob violence to be done to our people, as has been done to the Chinese, or create great legislative discriminations against them, we might not be able to control them. Japan is governed by its people."

Missionaries had told him the same thing, Prof. Taft said. He told of a letter he had seen written by an American in Japan at the time the campaign against Tsingtau was being launched. In this letter the writer quoted a Japanese as saying he didn't know "where the soldiers are going, but, I suppose, to fight the Americans."

Responsibilities of the Canal.

The Panama Canal, according to the speaker, has brought additional responsibilities. We have guaranteed the integrity of Panama, which means we should have to fight if it is invaded. Incidentally he remarked that he had recently talked to a geologist from the canal who said the waterway would soon be unobstructed. "When we dig out enough dirt," said Mr. Taft, "the canal will be all right—like a man with his appendix cut out."

We are the owners of Porto Rico and we have Cuba on our hands, the speaker resumed. We must intervene in the island whenever its independence is threatened or its property guaranties are in danger. We hope to make it self-dependent, but "it is a little bit like making bricks without straw, because of its alien land owners and its foreign capital."

Prof. Taft then traced the history of the Monroe Doctrine which, he said, "like the poor, we have always with us." He told of how it was prepared at the suggestion of Great Britain by John Quincy Adams, who, as Secretary of State, stood against Jefferson, Madison and Calhoun against including Great Britain in our part of the program. It was never anything more than a policy, the speaker declared, notwithstanding the "bull" of Secretary Olney, in Cleveland's administration, proclaiming the Monroe Doctrine as "public international law."

"Monroe Doctrine Rests on Force."

"The Monroe Doctrine," Prof. Taft exclaimed, "rests ultimately on force! Yet for 90 years we have kept Europe out of America without firing a shot and I think it will continue to do so. I do not believe the time has come to abandon it. If we do so, it will be an affirmative invitation to Europe to step in. We need not try to enforce it when the time comes if we do not wish to do so. But we should retain it and we should be prepared to maintain it. In a way it makes us responsible for the entire hemisphere.

"As to our European relations, 18 months ago we were dazed at the outbreak of the war. With our happy-go-lucky spirit I am afraid we have had the attitude expressed in the vernacular, 'we don't care a durn what happens so long as it doesn't happen to us.' We relied upon our blessed isolation to protect us.

"That was 18 months ago. How do you feel about it now? Conditions are very different with us. Both sides have violated our neutral rights. We asserted the right to sell arms to all belligerents, but the fortunes of war have made it impossible for one side to become a customer. Resentments are unavoidable.

"This has brought about a state of things in which we read one headline after another about ultimatums we have sent and we have become so used to them that we eat our breakfast before we take time to read what is under the headlines.

"I don't think we are going to be mixed up in this struggle. I hope we can preserve our neutrality. But the rights of neutrals are not receiving the proper recognition. The belligerents think they can make their own rules of war and make reprisals on each other regardless of whether they hurt neutrals. There ought to be an international law to compel all nations to consult the neutrals before they go to war."

The speaker then said it is time to decide whether we have not reached the place where we must decide whether it would not be advisable to make some arrangement with European powers to mass their [illegible] that would [illegible] that he and three others, among them President Lowell of Harvard, had recently met and talked over a plan for an international league of nations.

Purpose of Peace League.

The nations signatory to such an agreement would combine against any that started an ill-advised or unjust war. If the United States entered into any such alliance it would have to be prepared to use force whenever its obligations to the league demanded it.

Next he discussed the psychological condition of the American people and told how, confident of the might of volunteer soldiers, we had let the army dwindle at one time to 25,000 men. He spoke of Cleveland's defiance of Great Britain in the Venezuela dispute when a virtual ultimatum, "if you don't arbitrate this question, something is going to happen," was sent to Lord Salisbury.

"I don't know how we managed to escape trouble," Mr. Taft remarked with a laugh, "unless it was that Salisbury was a man of humor and liked America. I don't know how familiar he was with the great American game but, anyway, the bluff worked. In the end he won the hand by coming in and proving his case.

"And then it leaked out that if we had gone to war, England could have sent one battleship, entered every harbor we had and put our seacoast under ransom. We had just one coast defense gun and it was at Sandy Hook. Truly the Lord looks after children, drunken men and the United States."

Speaking of the war of 1898, Mr. Taft dryly remarked that he always felt the Lord had arranged it so we should go to war "with the only nation in the world that was less prepared than we were."

As to Mexico, the speaker said we had long had occasion to intervene if we wished, but that he thought we had already intervened too much. "If we were going to intervene," he added with another of his quiet chuckles, "we should have intervened all over." However, he gave it as his opinion that there was nothing to do but to go after Villa, and said he hoped if we captured the bandit we should turn him over to the de facto government. Previously he had remarked that in countries like Mexico they "don't have useless constitutional disabilities against divesting themselves of useless persons."

Playing Villa's Game.

We are playing Villa's game, he said, but we could not do otherwise. The speaker hoped we should not yet have to intervene, for, he said, it would be a much bigger job than pacifying the Philippines, which required 70,000 men.

"Did it make you feel confident," he added, "to know how long we had to wait before we could send 3000 men into Mexico? We should have a navy large enough to prevent any nation with a standing army to mobilize and send to our shores within one month 300,000 or 400,000 men. We should have a larger navy than any country that has a large standing army. We have the money to afford it. The framers of our Constitution did not fear that a navy would suppress the liberties of the people.

"We should make reasonable preparations, not such as would beget truculence and keep us standing around with a chip on our shoulder, but such as would enable us to perform our Christian duty to remove the temptation from any nation to invade us."

The former President departed on a Pennsylvania train at 11:50 p. m. He explained that he had to be in New Haven tomorrow to meet his classes at Yale.

LADIES! DARKEN YOUR GRAY HAIR

Use Grandma's Sage Tea and Sulphur Recipe and Nobody Will Know.

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and attractive. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is mussy and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, it becomes beautifully dark and glossy.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.—ADV.

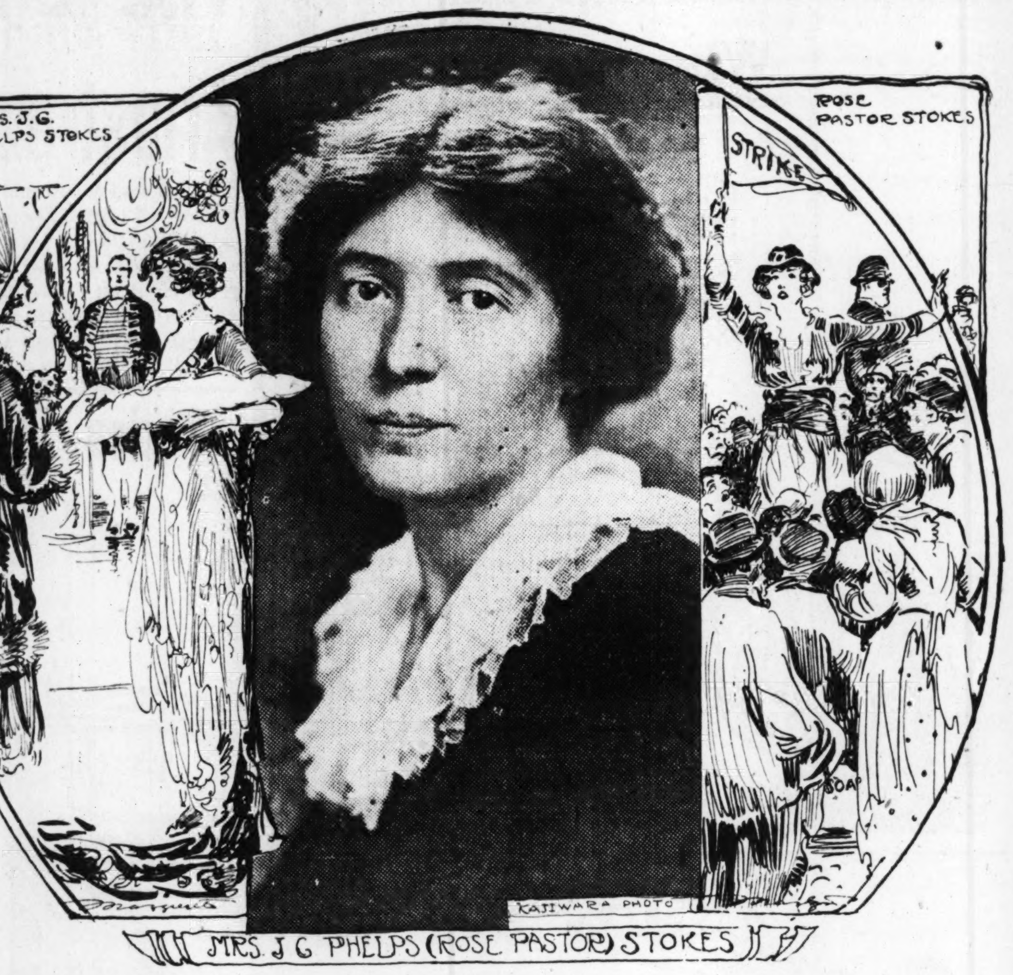
War to Bring Greater Socialization of World, Rose Pastor Stokes Tells Marguerite Martyn



MRS. J G PHELPS (ROSE PASTOR) STOKES

Former Cigarmaker, Now Wife of Millionaire, Interviews Hotel Waiter on Working Conditions.

By Marguerite Martyn.

I SAT opposite Mrs. J. G. Phelps Stokes, charming, cultured wife of a New York millionaire. She was having breakfast at 11 o'clock in a luxurious breakfast room of the Jefferson Hotel. A fountain tinkled musically at one side, birds sang in gilded cages, there was the sparkle of crystal and silver and the aroma of appetizing foods, mingling with the fragrance of hothouse flowers. Noiseless attendants anticipated every want. In short, there was the perfection of service taken for granted of an expensive hotel. A note of discord in the harmony would have been the exceptional, the noticeable thing.

But presently that note was struck, so forcibly and dramatically that I think I never shall quite contentedly and heedlessly enjoy similar surroundings again. Mrs. Stokes turned suddenly from the dainty breakfast she was ordering and interviewed the waiter on his conditions of work. And the two extremes of class difference and injustice were never quite so vividly brought home to me.

But I should have introduced her as Rose Pastor Stokes to explain everything. In some nationally famous strikes, those of the garment workers, the hotel workers, the shirtwaist makers, as a leader, an agitator, an executive, a fighter, the fervent young Jewish woman has become well and widely known to both sides of the social order, the employers and the employes, in dread or devotion, according to their respective standpoints.

Exceptionally gentle, graceful, finished as to speech, manner, movement, Mrs. Stokes today fits perfectly the environment of wealth, culture and aristocracy which her husband has surrounded her. Yet it is well known how she rose, so to speak, from the ranks. It is difficult to conceive that those fair, shapely "eloquent" hands—as someone in one of her St. Louis audiences spoke of them—once helped to support six younger sisters and brothers, by making cigars. Only when she tells you so tersely can you believe that the mistress of a home in New York, famous as a gathering place of the intellectuals, had only -- months' schooling and those before she was eleven; in London during one stage of her family's emigration from Poland to America. And dignified, reserved, self-possessed, certainly she does not fulfill the popular conception of the cigarette girl of song and story.

Waiter Tells His Story.

THE waiter, a boyish clean cut little chap, well mannered and alert, as his trade demands, recognized at once, from the nature of her questions, having read of her presence in the city, who it was that was displaying an interest in him. Quickly, cautiously, furtively, he gave his brief account of himself.

"We work in three crews," he said. "Two crews work regular hours. Every other day is a long day when we come to work at 6:30 in the morning and work until 2:30, come back at 5:30 and work until all the guests have departed. If it is a big show night and there are parties afterward, it may be three or four o'clock in the morning before we are off. Then next day is a short day. We go to work at 11:30 in the morning and work until 8 or 9 o'clock at night. The other crew is composed of short time men who do not know when they are to be called. They must register often during the day and be within call all the time, and they get paid only when they work."

"Have you a union here?" asked Mrs. Stokes.

"Oh, sure, we have a union," replied the waiter. "I am a union man. But the big hotels will not deal with the union. When I came looking for a job I was asked if I was a Geneva man. The Geneva association is an organization of hotel employes. The head of the dining room is always a Geneva man. When he gets his job he promises to furnish the crews. Well, found out if I was to work I must be a Geneva man. I must work, so I joined the association, which looks after the interests of the bosses, but not of the waiters."

"And what is your pay?" queried Mrs. Stokes.

"Salary? Oh, it is nothing," returned the serving man, with a derisive laugh. "It is not worth speaking of The only pay is what you give us in tips."

"And the tips?" prompted Mrs. Stokes knowingly.

"They have to be divided six, seven, eight ways," rejoined the waiter. "The head waiter and the captains must get their share."

"In New York it was the fining system that was one of the greatest abuses," resumed Mrs. Stokes as the waiter turned to his duties. "At the Hotel Belmont, where our strike started, it was the rule to fine a waiter $1 for dropping a spoon or a fork.

"Also a waiter was fined if caught sipping coffee or nibbling food left upon a returned tray. Now, you know it must be a hungry man who would eat another man's discarded food. Think of the bitterness instilled in the man beholding such extravagance and waste, knowing perhaps that his own family is being deprived of the necessaries of life."

"How far did the hotel workers' strike help matters?" I asked.

"It was not called a successful strike. The men went back to work without contracts. But it resulted in many ameliorations. The fining system is not so general in New York. Better working hours were obtained. Cooks before the strike worked every day in the calendar. It is not quite so bad as that now. And, then, it served to imbue employers with a wholesome fear.

How Stokes Uses Income.

THE strike, beginning with 200 men, finally enlisted 17,500. The public was greatly inconvenienced and the hotel keepers suffered untold loss. It was not a popular strike in the sense of enlisting serious public sympathy. The newspapers, with their vast influence, seemed to find in it only material for levity and comic pictures."

There is one question uppermost when the subject of the Phelps Stokes socialism comes up for discussion and that is: "Why do they not practice what they preach in regard to the equal distribution of national resources?" We are told how they live in some states, in a beautiful home covering an entire island in Long Island Sound. I was sure if I pointed out the inconsistency to Mrs. Stokes she would have some explanation, so I had no hesitancy in putting the question pointedly:

"Why don't we forthwith divide what we have with the poor?" She replied, interpreting me correctly, "Because no efficient or effective result would be arrived at. It is a mistake to say that my husband is a rich man when all his unearned income is systematically devoted to the organized effort to spread the socialistic doctrine and all our time and labor are devoted to the cause. We certainly think it more effective to further the cause that will eventually eliminate all unearned income than to spend it in ways that would never touch the basic causes of our economic inequalities."

An example of the reverse theory and practice, namely, our own James Eads How, came to my mind.

"He is a saint upon earth," said Mrs. Stokes, when I mentioned him. "He is one of our best friends, often visiting us. But his methods of doing good——" She threw up her hands in the gesture of futility.

In a discussion following one of her lectures during the week somebody put the question:

"Do you think socialism will prevail within one hundred years?"

"Oh, my, yes!" Mrs. Stokes exclaimed emphatically. Now I asked what in the present state of world politics made her so hopeful.

"Out of every war great good has come," she said. "It is difficult at the time for all to see it. There had to be a fairer division and already it is to be seen emerging from the turmoil in Europe. In every country over there collectivism is being forced upon the government. They are forced in crowding out private profits in the apportionment of clothing, food, shelter, munitions, everything. Now you can't unscramble scrambled eggs!"

War Not a Step Backward.

"IT seems to me war is a reversion to less civilized times," I observed.

"No, we don't go back," she insisted. "People come out of a war broken in a sense, but aroused in spirit, responsible, with more fight in them, more insistent. I do not doubt still other nations will become involved in the present struggle. Rumania will be next and the United States inevitably, if the war lasts a year longer. A change of front already has come over the administration at Washington. Let a few more merchant ships upon which there are Americans be torpedoed—and there will be American passengers to protect the cargoes—and the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany will be at hand. But out of the reorganization is coming the greater socialization of the world."

"Don't you see a hopeful sign also in the attitude of the younger generation of some of our millionaire families—Anne Morgan, the younger Rockefeller and others?" I suggested.

"I see how they themselves are going to be helped by it. Mixing with just folks is going to teach them that we are all just folks. But nothing can help except the change of the whole economic system."

Mrs. Stokes' latest crusade has been in behalf of the movement to do away with the law which forbids the circulation of information on birth limitation. Mrs. Sanger and her pamphlets on the subject were allowed to become a test case in New York, which case has been dropped by the courts.

"We accomplished that victory by arousing and influencing public sentiment," said Mrs. Stokes. "A great number of our best people socially were got together to assert their belief that information that is disseminated without question among the well to do, whose families have less need of limitation, should not be withheld from the poor, whose families do sometimes need limiting. When you read statistics proving that there were 800,000 preventable deaths among infants in the year 1913; when you learn that most of these deaths are among the very poor; when you contemplate what these births and deaths involve in economic waste alone, in loss of health among women and loss of time, it would seem that some measures of prevention were in order."

PACIFIC MAIL CO. PURCHASES THREE DUTCH STEAMERS

Vessels of 5000 Tons Will Be Put Under American Flag.

AMSTERDAM, March 18.—The Pacific Mail Steamship Co. of San Francisco has purchased three steamships from the Dutch West Indian Mail Stemship Co.

The steamer Venezuela, which had previously been sold to a Norwegian firm, was resold to the Pacific Mail Co. and has sailed to San Francisco under the American flag and with a Dutch crew. On the way the Venzuela will call at Cardiffe, Santos and Rio Janeiro.

The other two steamers are the Ecuador and Colombia. They will leave shortly for San Francisco after being refitted.

The Dutch vessels purchased by he Pacific Mail Steamship Co. were constructed last year. The Venezuela and Colombia are of 5500 gross tons each and 380 feet long and were built in Amsterdam. The Ecuader is of 5000 tons and was built in Flushing. Last August the Pacific Mail Co. sold the five largest vessels of its Oriental fleet to a subsidiary corporation of the International Mercantile Marine. The vessels are the Manchuria, Mongolia, Korea, Siberia and China.

MID-CITY CLUB OPENS ROOMS

New Organization Expects to Have 1000 Members.

Five of the former presidents of the West End Business Men's Association are now associated with the new club. Dr. Clarke, a former president of the association, said that there is no conflict between the two bodies, but that it is believed that the Mid-City Club will afford an opportunity for quicker action on city affairs, because of its daily meetings.

A Little Vaudeville From Border Theater of War

A Horse on the Correspondents—How to Get Villa Economically — Overworking the Wire Man—A Coincidence.

By CLAIR KENAMORE.

A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

COLUMBUS, N. M., March 15.

SHERMAN was right. He was used to it, too. He never bought a polo pony from a Lieutenant, hoping to sit on the hurricane deck of the same and see Pancho Villa lay his sword at Gen. Pershing's feet. Then to have this pony, when first you have "mounted up" and are loping leisurely down to headquarters, take a notion to lie down, and eventually carry out that notion without giving notice, is a disappointment.

Most of the correspondents saw fit to pretend that they knew all there was to know about horses. One youth finally collapsed and acknowledged that once, in the hallowed past, he had ridden Uncle Isadore's delivery horse from the store to the barn. Just once. Otherwise, he had never ridden a horse.

"Why do I have to take these two blankets?" he asked plaintively.

"One of them is for the horse to sleep on," a Captain told him.

THE question was on how long the army would be in Mexico. The scene was in the Palace Chop House in Columbus. There was nothing to be had in the way of refreshments but hamburger steak and soda pop.

Then up and spoke a man who led a troop of the guides:

"If we ever get in smelling distance of that bird, it will be just south of Torreon. I have rid with this army and I have rid with Villa, and I have rid with Carranza outfits, and this Pancho has got 'em all beat in going from here to there in a space of time. He can pass a given point quicker than anybody I ever saw.

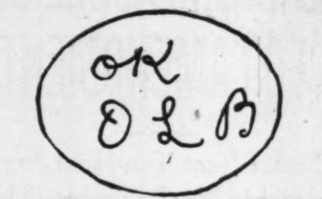
"He don't have to feed his men but about every three days, and his hosses never at all. When his hosses give out they tie 'em loose and catch up some fresh ones from a handy ranch.

"He's a bird, I tell you. The only way to catch him is with one of these aeroplanes."

An army officer made reply:

"I've got a lot better scheme than that. Now here we are going to a lot of trouble, getting all fussed up and dirty, and missing meals and spending about $5,000,000 of Uncle Sam's money to catch one ornery Mexican. Now that is economic waste. I have the financial brain, and should never have gone into the army. The thing to do is to advertise in every town and village in Northern Mexico that any United States Consul, Fred Simpich in Nogales, say, will pay $50,000 for the head of Francisco Villa. He has not got a man in his own command that would not kill him for that. That would be a clear saving of $4,550,000."

FACSIMILE OF O K
MARK BY CENSOR



The above mark is affixed by Lieut. O. L. Burzell, the acting censor at Columbus, to dispatches that he permits to go through.

THE United States army has methods that are strange to the mere layman. When Villa shot up Columbus, he entered the town by traversing an arroyo. This ditch is 15 ta 30 feet wide and six or eight feet deep. The preparations for the chase of Villa made necessary the frequent crossing of the arroyo. It was crossed thousands of times by horsemen. Wagons with four or six mules swung down into it at places where the banks had been cut, and pulled up the other side with great strain and picturesque language.

So it went up to the time of the departure of the troops. On that day, certain engineers appeared, looked at the ditch and made drawings. Soon came some sappers and after them army wagons laden with ties, and in a jiffy almost, two good bridges were built by cribbing. When they were done they were a serviceable and a much needed improvement, but, alas, the army was on the march.

ON the day after the fight at Columbus, the affair having been given perfect publicity by the Associated Press, the whole country was promptly advised. Everybody whose son, brother or husband was here telegraphed to ask how he had fared.

Son, brother or husband answered, such as remained, and so the traffic became terribly heavy. Finally the boy operator got a man to assist him, but the two of them could not handle the business. A good-natured captain presented his message, assuring the folks back home he was all right.

"Say," said the operator, "there is a United States law says I must not work over so many hours a day. I've worked 19 hours a day for three days."

"That's all right," said the captain soothingly. "We are the United States army. We have that law fixed."

THE day after the fight, officers' wives and other women of their families left Columbus hurriedly, at the urgent insistence of their husbands.

Officer Blank wrote in a telegram to another officer: "Mrs. Blank has gone to El Paso for dental work. So have Mrs. Dash and Mrs. Hyphen. Strange coincidence."

SALE OF PROPERTY THREATENED IF CAR LINE IS NOT EXTENDED

Pitzman Tells University City Residents What Will be Done if Franchise Is Granted.

Julius Pitzman, speaking at a meeting of residents and the City Council of University City last night at the city hall there, declared a franchise shoudl be granted the United Railways for a Delmar avenue extension of 3500 feet west of Delmar Garden, with the opportunity of extending the line to Hanley road within five years, or else the University Park Realty Co. would place its property within this district upon the market without restrictions. Pitzman is a stockholder in the realty company and acts as engineer for the property.

"However, if the franchise is granted," he added, "the district will be restricted to please those gentlemen who have residences there, to houses of from $5000 to $7000 value at the east end of the district and at least $3000 at the west end."

The ordinance to permit the extension of the car line west of Delmar Garden was laid over until a meeting of the Councilmen on the fourth Tuesday in May.

Speakers opposing the extension were Frank Rand, L. T. Ward, W. N. Chandler, Dr. E. A. Bagler, W. N. Turner and Dorsey Jamison.

MEXICAN ATTITUDE CARRANZA TRIBUTE, GEN. GAVIRA SAYS

Fact that Americans Were Not Resisted "Shows Confidence of People in Chief."

EL PASO, Tex., March 18.—Gen. Gavira issued a formal statement to the Associated Press at his headquarters at Juarez today in which he interpreted the fact that no resistance had been offered to the American forces crossing the border as proof of the faith of the Mexican people in Carranza. The statement was as follows:

"The constitutionalist army, formed by men of liberal thought and by armed citizens to fight oppression, has shown its force to the world by breaking the reactionary efforts of Diaz, Huerta and Villa.

"The American Government, almost always poorly informed, did not understand either our aspirations for liberty or our internal conditions. To decide in our favor by recognizing us as the de facto Government, it was necessary for the Secretary of State and the representatives of the A. B. C. to publish as unanswerable proof of our cohesion and discipline in a series of answers that, from distant points and without previous agreement, were sent them by the numerous liberal chiefs. These answers were set forth in the note that we all know.

"Now American troops have just crossed to our side of the line without protests or difficulties. To what, then, is it to be attributed that the Mexican public, so scrupulous and extremely sensitive in all that concerns its sovereignty, has not protested in the vigorous form it knows well how to make?

"It is because the people of Mexico have faith in us, because they know well the patriotism and the sense of honor of the First Chief and of the higher officers, military and civil, who are in control. They know that such men would not barter away the fatherland. Could the American people wish a better proof of the power of the constitutionalist army that has been constituted by the men of the revolution?"

"We have passed the crisis," said Gen. Gavira, earlier in the day, "and I feel much relieved. There is no question that the situation was very delicate and even serious for a while. The Carranza Government has demonstrated its ability to control the people and has been ably seconded by its Generals in the field.

"I do not wish to be understood as in any way approving the entry of American troops on Mexican soil. The restraint that the Mexican people have shown is due solely to the confidence that they have in the First Chief and his administration. The American people must realize the significance of the passage of their soldiers over so large a part of Mexico without being molested in any way.

"It is a supreme tribute to Gen. Carranza."

HEIRESS' MARRIAGE TO MAIL BUREAU SUITOR ANNULLED

Court Holds He Wed Illinois Girl to Get Money, but Failed and Deserted Her.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., March 18.—Judge Hart issued an order today annulling the marriage of Nellie Pearl Spence Bailey and Lawrence Bailey, Mrs. Bailey lived at Stanford and is a member of a wealthy and prominent family. The suit was brought by Frank A. Miller, conservator for Mrs. Bailey, whose property is said to be worth $200,000.

Bailey lived at Sioux City (Io.) and became acquainted with Nellie Spence through a correspondence bureau and after visiting her proposed marriage. They went together to the conservator and asked his permission to marry. He refused and they went to St. Louis and were married by a justice of the peace March 10, 1915. The mother of Miss Spence accompanied them, for, she said on the witness stand, she "was afraid he would run away with the girl and not marry her."

The couple lived together at Fairbury on a farm belonging to the bride. The court held that Bailey married her to secure her property and when he found he could not get her money that he deserted her.

ARMY BILL DEBATE ENDS, MEASURE UP FOR AMENDMENTS

Clark Closes Ten-Hour Arguments by Declaring That Country Is Against "Peace at Any Price"—Socialist Only Speaker Against Measure.

PRESIDENT APPROVES GENERAL FEATURES

Denies, However, Hay's Statement That Measure Is His Own Bill—Army Inadequate for Miniature War, Mann Declares.

WASHINGTON, March 18.—With virtually unanimous declarations for national preparedness, the House army increase bill reached the amendment stage today, after 10 hours of one-sided general debate.

The House will begin discussion of details in earnest Monday; but there are indications that opposition to the measure as a change in national policy, has collapsed. No opponent appeared during the debates except Meyer London, the Socialist Representative from New York.

The Senate's army bill also will come up Monday with the administration urging that the Senate sidetrack all other business until it is disposed of. Interest centered tonight in President Wilson's attitude as between these two measures, which differ essentially.

Chairman Hay of the House Military Committee described the House bill during the debate today as "the President's own bill." Republican Leader Mann questioned the accuracy of this description.

"Doubtless the President favors the best he can obtain," Mann said. "I have no doubt he favors it over existing law."

Not Committed to Hay Bill.

Tonight President Wilson let it be known that while he approves the general features of the Hay bill, he has not committed himself to its details. Administration officials are looking to the Conference Committee, which will adjust the House and Senate bills, after passage, to produce a measure which will have the President's full approval.

Speaker Clark closed the general debate in the House, expressing approval of the Hay bill and declaring it was satisfactory to the average American and as good as could be expected under the circumstances. The nation as a whole, he said, wished to hold a middle course.

"They want peace," he said,. "but not peace at any price. They want peace with honor. They believe thoroughly that there are things worth fighting for. They are not willing to bankrupt the country on military and naval preparations. They are however, willing to spend all that is necessary for the public defense."

Representative Mann characterized the bill as inadequate to the nation's needs, saying it would provide for preparedness for peace, not for war.

"I believe," he contined, "that it is the duty of the United States to prepare now an army which will add weight to diplomatic suggestions we make.

The time has come when it is wise for us to consider the possibility, the probality of the future and prepare now for what may come to us. If we do not, we may regret it to the end of our lives."

Kahn for Bigger Navy.

Representative Kahn, ranking Republican member of the committee, in closing the debate for the minority side, said that after all the first line defense was the navy and that it was more essential to put the navy on a footing where it could maintain control of the sea against any enemy that it was to build up an army. While the navy controlled the sea, he added, no invader could reach American shores.

Consideration of amendements began immediately on the close of debate. The only change made today was to raise the rank of the chief of coast artillery from a brigadier to major general. An amendment by Representative Gardner, Republican of Massachusetts, to increase the committee's figures for additional men in the coast artillery corps from 17,000 to 22,000 was voted down without division, but after considerable argument.

When the House adjourned, Representative Kahn had pending an amendment proposing a total authorized peace strength of 220,000 for the regular army instead of the committee's figure of 140,000. It will be taken up Monday and a test vote may come over its disposition,

Speaker Clark summing up what he believed to be the view of the American people on the present situation, said:

"They want peace, but not 'peace at any price.' They want 'peace with honor,' the sort of peace that Disraeli—the most brilliant Englishman since Lord Byron—boasted that he took home with him from the congress of Berlin, 'peace with honor.'

"While peace is the normal condition of Americans and while they love it most fondly, they believe thoroughly that there are things worth fighting for—a belief which they have demonstrated with guns in their hands on all proper occasions. They are sure, if need be, to do so again. They believe that the revolutionary war and the war of 1812 were, on our parts, just and necessary wars.

Opposes Huge Standing Army.

"They do not intend to see this country turned into an armed camp. They are unalterably opposed and forever will be, to a large standing army, because while we have never had a big standing army here, they know full well that in other countries huge standing armies have been the instruments of despotism.

"They are not willing to bankrupt the country in military and naval preparations. They are, however, willing to spend all that is necessary for the public defense.

"They are almost to a man against conscription in times of war.

"They have no desire to have our country pose as a great military power and they have no intention of seeing it as helpless as China.

"These hard-headed Americans believe profoundly in the philosophy that 'an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.' They are against a war of aggression, but they will fly to arms any day in a war for defense. They do not covet their neighbor's lands and they do not intend that a foreign foe shall set foot on the sacred soil of the American republic.

Hay Bill Reasonable.

"The average American is in favor of reasonable and adequate preparation by land and sea—not for the purpose of attacking any nation on earth, for he believes with Thomas Jefferson in 'peace, commerce and best friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none.'

"What he wants with reasonable and adequate armaments by land and sea is to repel attack of any and every nation under the sun, should any nation be so unwise as to attack us. While he is not eager to pay taxes, he is willing to foot the bills for reasonable and adequate preparedness. He will consider the Hay bill reasonable and adequate for our land forces.

"A great many people—I am not talking about foreigners, but Americans—a great many people here at home, sadly misjudge our character. We constantly are told that this is the most peaceful nation beneath the stars. While we are the most peaceful in the world, we are at the same time the most partial. Proof of that seeming paradox is that in April, 1861, there were not 20,000 soldiers in America, while in April, 1865, the continent trembled beneath the iron heel of two millions of the finest soldiers the sun ever looked down upon, some in blue and some in gray. So that will be again, should the occasion arise—which God forbid. We were 30 millions strong then; we number one hundred millions now."

Backed by the provisions of the bill, Representative Anthony of Kansas said, all the military necessities of the nation would be met with the increases proposed.

Represenative Anthony provoked an argument by stating his conviction that it was unnecessary to add any guns or men to the coast defenses. The bill provides 52 additional coast artillery corps companies, and Anthony said he had violated his own best judgment in voting for this section.

"I am glad you did," interjected Representative Moore.

Representative Sherley, chairman of the Fortifications Committee, said his seven years' study of coast defenses had convinced him more men were needed.

Mann Brings Up Mexican Case.

In his 15-minute speech Minority Leader Mann said:

"We are having a little trouble on the border of Mexico and are sending a few soldiers into that country. The time for that came after we had troops on the border for four years in contemplation of that very thing. Yet when this trouble occurred the troops were not actually sent across the border until the House had passed a resolution ordering an increase of 20,000 men to take the places of the few soldiers who might cross.

Senate to Take Up Bill.

The Senate military bill, which probably will be taken up for debate Monday, proposes a total peace strength for the army of 194,586 enlisted men and 10,726 officers. The figures are contained in the report on the bill, made public today, which was compiled by the Army War College. The war-time strength would be 236,000 enlisted men

The Senate bill would add the following organizations to the existing force, besides reorganizing the army: Infanments; field artillery, 15 regiments; engineers, 5 regiments; coast artillery 93 companies; mounted engineers; 2 battalions; 7 aero squadrons.

The House bill purposes to add: Infantry, 10 regiments; field artillery, 6 regiments; coast artillery, 52 companies; engineers, 15 companies; four aero squadrons.

Another difference between the bills is in the minimum strength fixed for the national guard under the proposed federalization provisions. The Senate bill provides for 280,000, while the House bill calls for 425,000 in five years.

The report on the Senate bill lays stress on its proposal for a third force, to take in men who for any reason would not be found in the ranks of the regulars or the national guard. This is described as a purely Federal volunteer force, and in effect it is comparable to a continental army total strength of 261,000 if this force is provided for.

The House bill aims at the same force through authorization of the training camp movement which has been in progress for two years.

The full strength of the defensive armies provided under the Senate bill would be 777,000 men in war times, exclusive of reserves.

Senators Favor Letting More Enlisted Men Into West Point.

WASHINGTON, March 18.—Radical modifications of the entrance requirements at West Point, so as to admit enlisted men, was debated in the Senate today during consideration of the bill doubling the number of cadets at the academy. The measure provides for appointment of one enlisted man a year from each regiment. Senator Reed offered an amendment making the appointment five to a regiment and Senators Gallinger and Smith of Georgia declared the cadet personnel at the academy should be made up entirely of men from the regular army ranks.

On suggestion of Senator Hitchcock, Senator Reed modified his amendment so as to limit the number of appointments from the ranks to 300 a year, though he said he personally favored opening the academy to any soldier who could qualify. Senator James proposed five appointments a year from each regiment of the national guard and Senator Cummins advocated decreasing the number of cadets appointed from civil life to give room for more appointments from the army.

Chairman Chamberlain of the military committee in charge of the bill said he was inclined to favor the Reed amendment, but feared its acceptance would handicap prospects for an early agreement with the House on other features of the measure. The only vote taken was one accepting Senator James' amendment restricting congressional appointments to the state rather than to the congressional districts.

WASHINGTON, March 18.—The income tax will place in the United States Treasury this year approximately $100,000,000, or $15,000,000 more than was estimated last fall, according to preliminary estimates compiled today by the Internal Revenue Bureau.

TEXT OF BAKER'S LETTER CITED BY GARDNER TO SHOW ARMY BILL IS INADEQUATE

Secretary of War Said Only Immediate Effect Would Be to Increase Regular Army by 40,000 Men.

WASHINGTON, March 18.—Following is the correspondence between Representative Gardner, Republican, of Massachusetts, and Secretary of War Baker, which was citew by Gardner in the debate in the House yesterday in support of his remarks that the army bill presented by Chairman Hay of the Military Committee did not go far enough, that it made a noise like preparedness, but it was not a "very noisy noise."

Gardner's letter to Secretary Baker is as follows:

"Sir: On page 14 of Mr. Hay's report on the new army bill I find a statement that 1,324,790 men will be at once available as a national force upon the passage of the Hay army bill.

"Calculating in the same way as Mr. Hay's table is calculated, how many men are now available as a national force without the passage of any bill at all? Very respectfully,

"A. P. GARDNER.

"March 9, 1916."

Baker's Reply to Gardner.

Secretary Baker's reply to Gardner follows:

"WASHINGTON, March 16, 1916.

"Dear Sir: In reply to your letter of March 9, 1916, I would answer the question therein contained as follows:

"Using the same method of calculation as Mr. Hay adopted on page 14 of his report on the new army bill, we should now have available, without any legislation whatever, approximately the following number of men who have had some military training:

"Regular army, including Philippine scouts, 100,000.

"Reserve of regular army, 60,000.

"National guard, 129,000.

"Men trained and in the country, 995,790.

"Total, 1,284,790.

"In other words the only immediate effect of the passage of the House army bill would be to increase the regular army by 40,000 men, and that increase being added in four annual increments, would require about four years' time to be recruited and a still longer time to become effective.

"The fallacy of this method of calculation is shown by the following statement of actual conditions:

"As a matter of fact, the reserve of the regular army at present amounts to only about 2,875 men. This number will increase gradually until under the existing period of enlistment it reaches a maximum equal to about 40 per cent of the total strength of the regular army, or about 40,000 men for the present army of 100,000, or 56,000 men for the army of 140,000 provided by the House bill. The next increase in the reserve would ultimately reach about 16,000, but it would not begin to become effective until about three years after the passage of the bill.

"Mr. Hay estimates that there are 995,790 men who have had military training and are now in the country. This estimated number includes 270,000 men who have passed through the regular army in the last ten years, 395,590 men who have passed through the national guard and 330,000 men who have passed through military schools and colleges in the same period. No deduction is made for those who have died or become unfit for service.

"From the annual reports of the adjutant-general, we find that during the last ten years there have been discharged from the army 89,644 men who did not re-enlist. If we estimate the number of those who have probably died or become physically unfit for service at 2 per cent a year, or 6,682, we would have remaining 82,796 men, instead of 270,200, as estimated by Mr. Hay.

"These 82,796 men may be considered as having been adequately trained at date of discharge, but subsequent changes in methods, armaments, etc., and the long separation of many of them from all connection with matters military make it unsafe to consider them as adequately trained except with respect to discipline. Three months intensive training probably would render them effective.

Guards Not Really Trained.

"It is believed that Mr. Hay's estimate of the number of men who have passed through the national guard is substantially correct, but none of these men were really trained when discharged, and about two-thirds of them wer discharged before expiration of term of enlistment when they had received training ranging from that imparted in one day to that possible in a nearly completed enlistment period.

Although last year some 33,000 students at our military schools and colleges were receiving military instruction, only 5252 of these were graduated. Using the latter figure for computing the number who have passed through military schools and colleges during the last 10 years, we obtain a total of 52,000 instead of 330,000 estimated by Mr. Hay.

"The records of the war college division show that as a matter of fact only about 40,000 have graduated during the last 10 years from civil educational institutions of all classes at which officers of the army were detailed. Until three years ago military training in these institutions consisted almost entirely of close order drill and ceremonies. Consequently none of the 40,000 graduates are adequately trained. The class which will graduate in 1917 will have received a much more adequate course of training.

"The only adequately trained men in the country are in the regular army and army reserve. The national guard, those who have served therein and the graduates of educational instructions having military training should be considered as only partially trained.

"The numbers of each are as follows:

"Adequately trained:

"Regular army, including Philippine Scouts, 100,000.

"Regular army reserve, 2900.

"Partially trained:

"National Guard, 129,000.

Others who have had some training, 241,800.

"Total 473,700.

"Including under the heading, 'Others who have had some training' are 82,796 who have passed through the regular army, about 132,000, less 2 per cent per annum allowance for deaths or physical disability, or about 121,200, who have completed an enlistment in the national guard, and 40,000, less 2 per cent per annum allowance for deaths or physical disability or about 37,800, who have graduated in the last 10 years from military schools and colleges.

"Except for about 1100 graduates of military schools who have been listed by the Adjutant-General the Government has no knowledge of the present addresses of any of these 241,800 men, nor of the number of them that would be willing to volunteer for service in time of war.

"The passage of the House army bill would increase the regular army by 40,000 men in a period of three to four years, would make a net increase of the regular army reserve by about 16,000 men in a period of about seven years and would also increase the national guard and therefore the number of partially trained men available in the country, but to just what extent I am unable to predict.

"You will, of course, understand that accurate information on this subject is not available and that, therefore, the figures I am giving you are at best only approximate.

"Very sincerely yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,

"Secretary of War."

QUESTIONS FRANCIS' RIGHT TO SERVE AS RAILROAD TRUSTEE

Peabody, Head of Rock Island Stockholders' Committee Says St. Louisan Owns Junior Securities.

NEW YORK, March 18.—A telegram sent today by Charles A. Peabody, president of the Mutual Life Insurance Co., to David R. Francis of St. Louis, recently appointed Ambassador to Russia, declares that Francis cannot properly continue to serve as a co-trustee with the Central Trust Co., for the Rock Island railroad under the receivership because of the fact that Francis owns a large amount of the junior securities of the railroad.

Peabody is chairman of the Protective Committee of the holders of the Rock Island first mortgage and refunding bonds. In a previous telegram he charged Francis with neglect of duty for not attending a hearing on the Rock Island case at Chicago March 3, and in today's message criticises Francis for later consulting with the Judge privately.

In a letter to Peabody, Francis had told of protesting to the Court against a proposal of Peabody's attorney that the Rock Island should default on the April interest on the first mortgage and refunding bonds. Francis said he believed this was a scheme of the holders of the bonds to get possession of the property at foreclosure sale for less than its worth. In today's telegram Peabody says the committee is holding more than 20 per cent of the outstanding first mortgage and refunding bonds has resolved to ask the trustees to institute foreclosure proceedings.

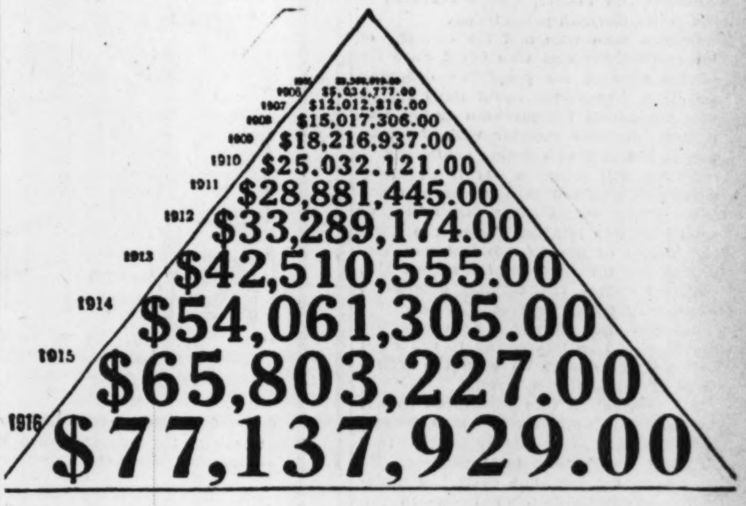
Every Kansas City Life Policy is secured by a Guaranty Fund of $4,136,287.64 deposited with the State of Missouri—THE LARGEST DEPOSIT OF ANY MISSOURI COMPANY—and $530,142.67 IN EXCESS of net liability to policyholders.

INSURANCE IN FORCE



Our Symmetrical Growth Makes This Pyramid Possible

TO POLICYHOLDERS: While the history of this company for the past eleven years has been an unbroken record of steady progress and financial success, the extraordinary percentage of increase in insurance in force, assets and surplus, make 1915 the best year in the entire life of the institution. During 1915 the percentage of net increase in Insurance Account to New Business was 52%, probably the greatest of any company.

DOES INSURANCE PAY? Upon policies which became claims last year there had been paid total premiums of $58,415. Families of the insured received back every dollar of the premiums and $285,467.72 IN EXCESS OF THAT AMOUNT—or a profit of over 589 per cent on the investment. Old-line-insurance in these 169 instances had superlative merit AS AN INVESTMENT. YES! INSURANCE DOES PAY.

Our business is limited to the interior section where living conditions are favorable and as a result the death rate of the Company continues low. Death claims paid last year amounted to $4 per $1000 of insurance in force. Good interest earnings and low death rate enable the Kansas City Life to furnish protection at the LOWEST NET COST.

New insurance issued has averaged $72,000.00 for every business day of 1915, increasing the number of company patrons to approximately 50,000 persons.

The Kansas City Life has always been conspicuous for economy in administration. The total compensation of Home Office officials, directors and employees, last year was $68,698—less than 2½ per cent of income.

More than eighty-five per cent of the Company's funds are safely invested in first mortgages on improved real estate, school bonds and loans to policyholders, at satisfactory rates of interest. Constantly increasing land values in the West make farm mortgage loans highly desirable investments.

The ratio of assets to liabilities was substantially increased during the past year—a striking evidence of careful administration of the Company's affairs.

The excess of income over operating expenses was $1,880,854.49, of which $973,299.68 was paid to policyholders and $850,859.63 was added to their reserves—thus 75% of the entire premium income was devoted to policyholders.

The Kansas City Life dominates in its home territory in the amount of new insurance issued. During nineteen-fifteen, as in former years, its new business in western territory, including Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Northern Texas, was the greatest of any American company. This institution could receive no higher indorsement than this generous recognition and patronage from home territory where the company is best known.

SALESMEN WANTED: Thru our system of co-operation with men in the field, previous experience is not necessary to success. Life underwriting has attracted the most brilliant men because it offers the greatest financial rewards. Our agency representatives earn large average incomes because the company is well and favorably known in western territory and Kansas City Life policies are easy to sell. If you have any ability as a salesman and are ambitious to increase your income, a connection with this successful western company is what you want.

We have attractive openings for a limited number of good men in Missouri, Illinois and Arkansas. You are unjust to yourself if you do not write today for details of our agency proposition.

VON TIRPITZ CASE LIKENED BY BERLIN TO BISMARCK FALL

Germany Stirred as It Has Not Been Since the Retirement of Iron Chancellor.

Kaiser Decorates Von Tirpitz, Thanks Him for Services

BERLIN, March 18, by wireless to Sayville.—"Emperor William," says the Overseas News Agency, "has written a letter to Grand Admiral von Tirpitz, expressing his regrets at the Admiral's resignation and thanking him for the excellent services he rendered to the country during his long career as creator and organizer of the Germany navy.

"The Emperor at the same time, ordered the name of Admiral von Tirpitz continued in the navy list and further bestowed upon him the star of Grand Commander of the house of Hohenbzollern, with swords."

By KARL H. VON WIEGAND.
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

BERLIN, March 18.—Not since young Wilhelm II abruptly dropped Bismarck as pilot of the ship of state has Germany been so stirred by the retirement of a statesman as by the resignation of Admiral von Tirpitz, who is featured in the entire German press today.

Only a man who had the courage of his convictions and who could dare fly in the face of the people by dropping the Iron Chancellor could have let go this wonderful Bismarckian figure and a man intensely popular with the people, in the face of existing sentiment.

"What will America say if Germany surrounds England with submarines and sinks every vessel after due notice of such intention is given?" was the question asked of me by Admiral von Tirpitz in his interview in December, 1914, which forecast the coming submarine retaliatory policy against England.

America has answered that question and it would be interesting to tell what that answer has to do with the retirement of Admiral von Tirpitz.

His resignation was announced by the semi-official Wolff Bureau in a laconic four-line item. It merely stated that Admiral von Tirpitz had resigned. No reason was given, not even the diplomatic circumlocution of ill-health usually advanced.

Admiral Edouard von Capelle, 60 years old, who retired in November, 1915, as director of administrative department of the Reichsmarineamt (Royal Marine Service), is selected as his successor. Admiral Capelle for many years has been Admiral von Tirpitz's right-hand man.

Theodor Wolff, one of the best editorial authorities, writes in the Berliner Tageblatt today:

"Speculation over the retirement of Admiral von Tirpitz would be useless."

Everybody is familiar with the cause of his retirement, Count Zu Reventlow, in the Tageszeitung, intimates. He lauds Admiral von Tirpitz as the father and organizer of the German navy.

Thus Herr Wolff says in the Tageblatt:

A Versatile Organizer.

"Admiral von Tirpitz in the execution of his idea and his plans proved the most versatile organizer. He understood above all other things the art of inspiring his officers and crews with enthusiasm and ambition. No one dare doubt his genius in this direction, and even those who have persistently opposed the Tirpitz naval policy are prompt in acknowledging the exceptional will power and rare mental faculties of the man.

"Such criticism as emanated from navy experts and technicians concerned itself with the policy of constructing expensive battleships of the larger types at the expense of the insistent demand for submarines. Much of the criticism can be traced back to sources which originally had discounted the undersea boat as a weapon of future warfare.

The dominating principle along which his line of action lay proceeded from the central idea that the decisive weapon in warfare of the future must be heavy battleships.

Herr Wolff indicates that the Tirpitz policy was against building U-boats when he formulated his plan for a big fleet of dreadnoughts. He says he recalls the Reichstag debates only because the strongest opponents to the U-boat as a naval weapon at the time are making the most extreme demands for its use now.

"It does not concern in any way the demands for the execution of the intensified war on commerce as in the torpedoing of armed merchantmen in accordance with the Government's announcement in a memorandum which has the approval of everybody in Germany." Herr Wolff continues.

Wanted Limitless Warfare.

"Those who have indulged in such exceptional agitation and clamor," he adds, "demanded something entirely different. They wanted a limitless and ruthless prosecution of submarine warfare, which meant the indiscriminate torpedoing of boats regardless of their character or nationality, and they worked for the realization of this plan with every means at their command.

"With the naval experts and enthusiasts and men of sincere convictions there rallied around this program men who desired to conceal their former antagonistic attitude toward the submarines, and also journalists who made their studies at the bathing beaches of the Baltic. Others, through emphasis on a 'strong' policy, wanted to create the erroneous impression that heroism also abides in their bosoms.

"It is wholly unpermissible to lay at the door of Admiral von Tirpitz all that has been rumored, written and talked about his post in the past few weeks.

"In the moment when retiring from that post, after years of distinguished services, one can only see a strong and important personality. His portrait must not be detached from his accomplishments. We all have but a single hope—that his creation, the German navy, may yet meet great glory."

Disgusting

Catarrh Victims Fearfully Nauseating to Those Who Are Near Them.

The Positive Cure for Catarrh Is the Gauss Treatment—a Free Trial to Prove It Is Sent to All Who Write for It.

"You Are Sentenced to Deportation. Society Cannot Put Up With Your Filthy Catarrh Habits Any Longer."

That is what most people would like to say to the man or woman who suffers from this abominable disease. It is not because society does not pity the poor victims, for it does, but because disgust is so much stronger than pity that it outweighs it.

Of course the poor victim cannot help the catarrhal practices that so nauseate everybody else—they are a part of the disease from which he suffers—but it is simply impossible for the average healthy man or woman to overcome the disgust that he or she feels at having to witness such unspeakable exhibitions. Neither friendship nor love can rise superior to these sights, sounds and odors, that revolt in spite of all attempts to check the revulsion. The victim becomes a social outcast, despite all his or her good qualities, simply because it is a trial to everyone else to have him or her in the vicinity.

Much may be borne for the sake of politeness and from a feeling of pity, but seldom indeed does one leave the presence of a catarrhal unfortunate without heaving a sigh of relief at being again in the pure, sweet, undefiled air, away from obnoxious breath-odors, and out of sight of those symptomatic habits that turn the stomach sick.

Most pitiful of all is the fact that so many of these catarrh victims do not recognize that they are objects of disgust to all around them. They do not smell their own breaths and do not, therefore, know how offensive they are. No one tells them, because no one wants to hurt their feelings. The catarrhal person doesn't notice his own acts in clearing his throat, blowing his nose and spitting, because he is so accustomed to these things, and they are so necessary to him that he pays no more attention to them than he does to his breathing. Everybody else notices them, though, and everybody else wishes they didn't have to notice them.

These catarrhal practices, both pitiful and disgusting, are enough to make even the members of one's own family breathe a sigh of relief when the door closes after the victim.

Love itself wavers and disgust forbids the kiss. And out of regard for the afflicted one, little mention of his pollution is ever made to his face, and he must rely on his own misery and such plain talk as is contained in this page to reach him and to cure him. There is cure for this pestilence within the reach of every one. It was not always so. Catarrh has raged fiercely through the years like a firebrand, and in the eagerness to quench it, many useless things were given out as cures, but it remains now after the slow process of extermination and discovery, to offer the positive real cure, which has been born of ceaseless searching and common sense.

Thousands Praise Gauss.

This is Gauss' Combined Treatment for Catarrh. The story is told over and over again a thousand times of the lost birthright, to health restored, of the happiness caused, of the release from a degrading pestilence and of hope and comfort and sleep returned by the use of this wonderful, simple Gauss treatment. It must be true. There are heart-stories from all over the land that bubble up from gratitude. They tell, as nothing else can, the misery in which catarrh plunges, the danger it brings, the deaths it causes, and then again there are other pictures painted in the letters of happiness and health redeemed, lost energy restored and ambition reclaimed.

Send the Coupon.

If you are a catarrh victim, don't allow yourself any longer to be avoided by your friends because of your catarrh atmosphere, to be an object of nauseous disgust among strangers, to have people you know turn their faces away from you when you talk to them, to have people move away from you and stick up their noses as you sit next to them, to have your family hate to have you come around—all because of the catarrh odor that everywhere and always makes you an outcast.

Gauss' Combined Treatment for Catarrh stops bad catarrh breath right off short and quick, and kills every catarrh germ in the body. If a man or woman will spend comparatively little time and money it takes to cure catarrh by means of the sure Gauss Treatment, the little coupon at the corner of this page will be cut out and sent flying toward Marshall, Mich., with the patient's name and address on it. Confessions of a Catarrh Victim

Some of the Experiences That Catarrh Forces Upon Its Slaves.

I get boiling mad when people tell me I've got catarrh. I've had dozens of mere acquaintances, and especially one young lady, who have come up and ventured to tell me something "for my own benefit." That expression begins to pall on me—"for my own benefit." It seems they all want to tell me the same thing. "You ought to take something for your catarrh; I'll tell you how my cousin got cured, and every doctor used to say he had the worst case he ever heard about."

Now, when a friend puts his hand on my shoulder, I gulp in preparation for catarrh advice. This gulp is not mere throat action, but the swallowing of mucus. Nothing would suit me better than to have the earth open and swallow me up.

I walk along the street close to the curbstone. When I ride on a car, I stand on the rear platform rather than sit down inside.

I wish I could talk without having to open my mouth to breathe. I wish that kisses were obsolete. I wish that handkerchiefs could be turned into sheets. I wish that no chair but mine would be placed at the table. I wish that other people were deaf, blind and without noses.

I wish that I were alone, always alone, to hawk and spit when and where I please. I wish that I was my mother's little fairy once more, with my little tousled head that knew not disease lying on her warm shoulder.

Now I feel that I am an outcast. I know what they think of me, everyone. I know my friends shun me, for even Jack, my old college chum, doesn't come around and chat and smoke any more as he used to do. My acquaintances only say hello, and pass by. Mrs. Grundy next door and all the other neighbors are talking about how repulsive I am. I see it in the way they look and act. People I sit next to get up and move somewhere else. People who talk to me turn their heads at an angle. And I'm in pain. It is not alone physical pain. It's my mind, too, that is in agony.

Trained Nurses Strongly Recommend Gauss' Catarrh Cure to All Sufferers.

I can't remember things as I used to. Thoughts slip away from me. I say things I don't mean, and mean things I don't say.

My head is thick and my brain is in a fog.

I walk alone, my work palls on me, my nerves refuse me, that let-her-go feeling has got me. I relish nothing I eat, and my appetite is gone. And as I think of my misery I must hawk again. My cough is a rattle. The ruby has been plucked from my cheeks, the flush of my young health is gone. My head is in a fever, but my hands are cold, and I seem to feel in them the approaching chill of the tomb—I have read of catarrh death, and my mother's brother died of the same disease. Come on, death, and relieve me.

No, my mother comes. Who, Gauss, did you say, mother? Do you think so? I'll try, mother. Yes, you send for the treatment; I'll use it faithfully. I won't let it go a single day without using it. They prove it in every case, do you say? All right; send on the coupon today. Perhaps, after all, there is a cure, and still one person in the world to live for, one who will love you in spite of the catarrh, your mother.

Gauss' Catarrh Treatment is the simplest and surest in the world. It cures catarrh on a common sense plan, and Gauss proves it. Cut out the coupon below and mail it today, and get a free package of the Gauss treatment and prove to your own satisfaction that it will cure you. Whether you have catarrh slightly or seriously it may be the means of brightening your life, now overshadowed by catarrh. Send coupon to C. E. Gauss, 8623 Main st., Marshall, Mich.

An Old Soldier Grateful

Mr. Gauss: I have finished your treatment now, and I am completely cured. My wife says she cannot detect any of it left and says my catarrh is gone. She ought to know, for she is a graduate nurse. I am as truly grateful to you as an old soldier can be for what your treatment has done for me, and certainly will recommend it to those whom I know are afflicted. You are certainly at liberty to use this if you want to recommend your treatment to others.
W. B. PLUMB.

Catarrh Everywhere Even on Pike's Peak

No Man or Place Is Immune From the Deadly Catarrh Germ.

There is no part of the land which is free fram catarrh. Altitudes and latitudes have little effect in destroying the omnipresent germ. Many imagine that the climate of the West, with its high altitudes and dry atmosphere, tends to prevent catarrh. There are just as many cases, in proportion to the population, west as east of the Mississippi, only the disease is not so severe because of the climatic effect upon the nerves.

"Happy Together Once More! Mr. Gauss Has Cured My Catarrh."

Even on Pike's Peak, which is over 14,000 feet above sea level, catarrh seemed to attack several of the attaches of the signal station located there some years ago.

No place is exempt, no human soul is immune from catarrh. Don't imagine because you don't live by a lake or river that you can't have catarrh, or that you have only a chronic cold when your nose has been stopped up for some time. That is usually the way catarrh starts—with a bad cold.

Better spend a few days destroying the catarrh germ right from the start, than waiting and putting off until you feel droppings in your throat and your nose clogged up.

The Gauss Complete Treatment will stop it and avoid for you years of future misery. Cut out the coupon below, if you have even a slight cold or a touch of catarrh, and send it to C. E. Gauss, who will send you a free package of the wonderful Gauss treatment, so as to prove to yourself its great power.

It costs you nothing. Address coupon to C. E. Gauss, 8623 Main street, Marshall, Mich.

"If I Had My Life to Live Over."

We can point to hundreds of cases of catarrh that have dragged their blear-eyed, nose-dripping, half-dead victims through 15 and 20 years of misery. It all started with one little germ. Just one of Gauss' Catarrh Treatments for a little while would have killed off Mr. Germ and reclaimed to health and happiness in short order some of the world's best women and bravest men, who now dodder about in blank, diseased old age, to fill some cold graves—food for thought. Think of yourself at 40 or 50 or 60, clutched by catarrh. If you only had your life to live over! A 2-cent stamp would blot out all the misery.

It is not too late. Cut out the coupon below, fill in your name and address and take courage. Do it willingly and with hope. Mail it to C. E. Gauss, 8623 Main street, Marshall, Mich., and you will get by return mail a free package of Gauss' Catarrh Treatment to prove that it will cure you.

Sniffler Chased Out of Meeting

Enraged Audience Roughly Handles Gagger Who Interrupts Speech.

San Antonio, Texas, Sept. 19.—During a public primary meeting here today, a middle-aged man in the audience, who was fumbling a rolled-up handkerchief in his hand and persistently sniffling and pulling his nose during the delivery of a speech, was forcibly ejected from the assembly hall. Cries of "Kick him out" and "Choke the lobster," interrupted the proceedings, and finally resulted in a grand rush for the nose-puller by some of the enraged hearers. He was grabbed by the coat collar and unceremoniously and swiftly moved toward the door.

When the man first sat down and began loudly tearing out a throat-hawk, the audience shifted nervously. After continuing the draw-rattle of his catarrh through one of the most stirring parts of the speech the audience gave vent to its feelings. He was roughly handled on the way out, and sustained several severe bruises. He was taken to the county hospital.

It is such occurrences as these which make the catarrh victim one of the despired of his race. He can't help but show his disease. If this man had simply spent a few moments' time to send to C. E. Gauss for a package of the wonderful Gauss Catarrh Treatment, he never would have suffered such an indignity as being kicked out of a public meeting.

It is not too late. Cut out the coupon below, fill in with your name and address and take courage. Do it willingly and with hope. Mail it to C. E. Gauss, 8623 Main Street, Marshall, Mich., and you will get by return mail a free TRIAL package of Gauss' Catarrh Treatment to prove that it will cure you.

Some Results of Catarrh

Even Slight Cases of Catarrh Have Terrible Consequences.

Every case of catarrh, of course, is not fatal. Nor does every case result in consumption or bronchitis, but nevertheless they are very frequent. No man or woman knows what his or her case of catarrh will lead to. Men of robust health have succumbed to resulting consumption and partial idiocy. Women of strong vitality have become nervous wrecks and victims of bronchitis. Your good health is not always a preventive against the catarrh germs.

The more you feel sure there is no danger of the catarrh resulting in a disease more serious, the more danger there is; simply because you neglect yourself. This happens in hundreds of cases and we see it recorded almost daily in the letters we receive. "If I had only started earlier," is a very frequent expression, showing that our warning is not fanciful, but based on fearful reality.

Even slight cases of catarrh may result in nose cancer, than which there is hardly a more pitiful affliction in this world.

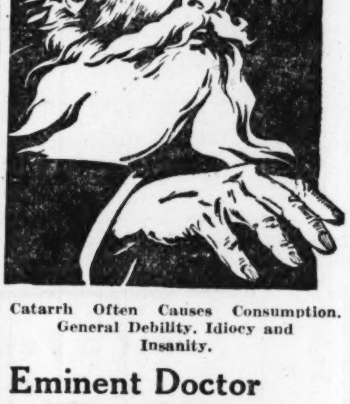
Catarrh Fatally Frequent.

Some of the frequent results of catarrh are bronchitis, pneumonia, death, and decay of bones, loss of thinking and reasoning power, death in ambition and energy, loss of appetite, indigestion, dyspepsia, ulceration, bad breath, raw throat, raw sores in the nose, general debility, and sometimes idiocy and insanity.

This is why in the death list you do not find a mention of fatal catarrh; the death is caused not directly by the catarrh itself, but by a disease which was caused by catarrh. Medical books and cyclopedias will tell you even more serious news than we tell you here; probably after reading them you will have a full realization of what it is to have catarrh—a common disease, it is true, but with a common result—misery for years if not death.

Cure Is Certain.

You can cure that catarrh, slight or serious, once and forever by means of Gauss' Combined Treatment. We don't ask you to believe it before proving it yourself. Therefore we send you a treatment at our own expense, absolutely free to you. When you get it, you can prove it all to your own satisfaction. It is without question the greatest catarrh cure on earth. Cut out the coupon and send for the free treatment today to C. E. Gauss, 8623 Main st., Marshall, Mich. When you see your catarrh begin to leave you, you will appreciate what it is to have a real, genuine cure for catarrh that can be relied on. Send the coupon.



Catarrh Often Causes Consumption, General Debility, Idiocy and Insanity.

Eminent Doctor Says Blindness Due to Catarrh

London, Aug. 6.—Dr. H. Manning Fish, of Joliet, Ill., declared at the medical congress that most of the blindness in the world is the result of catarrh in the upper nasal cavities or the bony cells composing the roof of the nostrils.

Dr. Fish described his experience in 86 cases, covering a period of several years, claiming that in each of these, immediate improvement of the vision followed the effective treatment of the diseased nasal cavities, and advised that in cases of loss of vision following grip, measles, scarlet fever and kindred ailments, relief be sought through treatment of the noses of the patients.

Catarrh is caused by a germ which must be destroyed before the catarrh itself can be cured. If not cured, blindness may result. An extended history of the many extraordinary cures effected by the Gauss treatment will probably be brought to the attention of the next international meeting of the medical congress.

Thought Wife a Consumptive

Your catarrh medicine is a wonderful medicine. My wife had it so bad everyone thought she had consumption. She used to cough all night and could not sleep at all. One doctor gave her up. He said she would not get cured if she stayed here. I have tried all kinds of medicine and found them no good, till I tried yours, and it acted right away. I recommend it to all my friends. You may mention my name if you please, and they can write to me and I will let them know how bad my wife was with catarrh. But she is a well woman once more.—W. Thomas, 936 Talman av., Chicago, Ill.

Catarrh Terribly Embarrassing

This Is Especially True at Meals, When the Uncontrollable Habits of Catarrh Victims Chase Away the Appetites of All at Table.

Catarrhals Are Unwelcome Guests.

The sufferer from catarrh either leads a life of continual embarrassment and shame over his (or her) unavoidable habits, or else is so unmindful of the opinion of others as to not care how much they are annoyed or sickened.

At the table, at mealtime, when everybody is gathered about the board with sharp appetites and pleasant anticipations of the good things to come, the catarrh victim is suddenly taken with the desire (or rather, the necessity) of raising mucus. There is a scramble for his trusty handkerchief, a quick turning of his head, a struggle to suppress the nauseating spectacle, and then—! But why detail the thing? In a nutshell, the meal is spoiled for everyone, and nausea has replaced appetite as disgust has replaced anticipation. The poor catarrh victim feels ready to sink through the floor at each repetition of these mortifying, degrading scenes. He feels like a leper—like one who has no business to associate with clean, normal people. It is awful.

My! My! What An Awful Breath! Take My Advice, Write Gauss Today and Cure That Catarrh.

If you have nerves, or you believe other people have any, you will just stop and look at yourself as you are, and before other people move away from you when they see you coming, you ought to run away from them. In the Coils From Childhood

I have suffered with catarrh since I was 4 years old, but it has annoyed me more in the last two years.

I tried everything I read or heard of, but they did me no good and I saw your advertisement in a paper and I wrote to you and received a sample package. I was impressed so favorably with the sample that I immediately sent for the full treatment.

I suffered much with the dropping back into my throat and after I had taken the medicine for three or four weeks this nasty sensation entirely ceased, and I have never had any return of it. I am now fully cured of my catarrh and am very grateful to you and your medicine.

I will be very glad to tell anyone whom I think needs it and if you wish to use my name you may do so, as I am so grateful that I wish everybody who needs it would use it, and I am sure that it will cure them.—Miss Mattie Drullinger, Birdsell's st., South Bend, Ind.

Catarrh Kills Thinking Power

Gradual Clouding of the Brain and Loss of Memory Inevitable Result of Catarrh.

Catarrh anywhere in the head or throat or ears is right next to the brain. The catarrh germ grows fast, does an enormous amount of damage in its burrowing into the bone and flesh and is difficult to destroy. There are thousands of little nerves that run from all parts of the face and head to the brain. Some of these little nerves have to pass through probably a mass of catarrhal inflammation on the road to the brain. When they do they are weakened, and sometimes destroyed.

What affects the nerves is bound to affect the brain, and when the nerves are deadened by constant catarrhal discharges there is bound to be a certain torpor or stupidity brought about in the brain of the victim. Thus follows sleeplessness, inability to think clearly, or connect ideas, loss of memory, lack of concentration, lack of presence of mind, and a wandering thought.

When it takes such a comparatively short time to cure this terrible disease by the Gauss common-sense treatment, and regain the flash and brilliancy of the normal brain, there is no good reason why one should not spend the two or three minutes it takes to cut out the coupon below and send it to C. E. Gauss, and have him prove to you that he is right, and that he positively cures catarrh. The coupon below mailed now will bring you back by return mail a package of the wonderful Gauss treatment. It costs you absolutely nothing. Address C. E. Gauss, 8623 Main st., Marshall, Mich.

How to Judge Man's Honesty

The Man Who Lets You "See for Yourself" Is Usually Honest.

Men, as a rule, are first discovered by their enemies. The antagonists turn on the searchlight, and the proof of merit will depend on being able to stand the gleam. There are always men who aim to tear down every good thing, and there have been men who set about to ridicule the Gauss Catarrh Treatment and figuratively tear it into shreds. They turned on the gleam and dissected it. They expected to find mere dross, and found gold. So Gauss has been discovered by his enemies.

But regardless of all this, if a man will "show the goods" he has, willingly and openly, and let his patients prove first to themselves by their own senses the value of what he offers them, instead of expecting them to take his word for it—there must be something of value in his "goods," and it must show his intentions to be honest.

Every catarrh victim should make a test of the great Gauss Catarrh Treatment. It is free. All you have to do is to spend a minute or two cutting out the coupon below, filling in with your name and address, and send it on to C. E. Gauss, 8623 Main street, Marshall, Mich. You will get back a package of the Gauss Catarrh Treatment in plain wrapper and under seal, with full information and instructions. It costs you nothing, and you put yourself under no obligation whatever.

Use it according to instructions: don't expect too much of the treatment you get, and it will prove to you that the worst case of catarrh can be cured, and that the Gauss Catarrh Treatment can do it.

Cut out and mail the coupon today.

I Want to Cure You

I only wish I could gather some of my patients together and let you hear them talk. Some of these people had such extreme cases of catarrh that a cure was unknown to them. My treatment not only cured them, but its effect made them feel much healthier.

After a one-minute conversation with a Gauss patient, you would be firmly convinced that the statements set forth here are facts.

But I can't do that, so let me do the next best thing. Let me send you a trial treatment free. Fill out the coupon below.

"Thank Heavens We Have Such a Man as Gauss"

There is no case too serious for Mr. Gauss to consider; no case too slight for considerate attention; whoever writes to him receives a prompt reply; whatever questions are asked are answered, and advice is freely given. It is his liberal treatment of everyone, the broad view that he takes of everyone's whims and eccentricities, and his sympathy for the afflicted, that has so often brought forth in letters received from happy patients all over the land this sentiment: "Thank heavens, we have such a man as Gauss."

It is not necessary to write a letter in asking for a free treatment. Just cut out the coupon at the bottom of this page and send it to C. E. Gauss, 8623 Main street, Marshall, Mich., and you will receive by return mail, in plain sealed wrapper, a free package of Gauss' Catarrh Treatment. It will cost you nothing, and put you under no obligation whatever. This is to prove to you at once what the treatment will do, even in the worst cases of catarrh.

United States Commissioner Heard From

Having been absent for some time, I now take the opportunity of answering your letter. I took the treatment as nearly as I could and would state that I am cured. It is the best catarrh medicine that I have ever taken, having tried everything that I could hear or read of; and I am thoroughly satisfied that it is a genuine remedy for catarrh; and if ever I feel the effects of this disease coming back to me I should immediately order more of your treatment. Your medicine for taking internally, I think, is the best I have ever used for constipation or indigestion. You are at liberty to use the contents of this letter and any reference made to me will be cheerfully answered. Edward McCagherty, United States Commissioner, Warroad, Minn., box 1.

BRONCHOS BUSTED IN THE NINTH AND CARDS WIN, 8 TO 2

Bob Steele Gives Fine Exhibition of Pitching for Three Innings—Meadows Not So Good.

SEQUENTIAL HITTING SCORES CLUSTER OF 5

Cruise Drives in First Run, Steals Second and Tallies When Betzel Wallops One Over Second.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., March 18.—Miller Huggins' merry men trod on each other's heels getting around the bases in the ninth inning of today's contest with the Bronchos of San Antonio.

When the wreckage of the Broncho defense had been cleared away reliable estimates put the damages at five runs and one ball game. That big rally, the first honest-to-goodness session of its kind the Cards have had this year, put the game on ice.

The score was 8 to 2 in favor of the Cards.

Ben Davenport was the victim of the Cardinal swatfest. He had shut out Hug's men for three innings and was feeling quite chesty when the storm blew up.

Jeck Smith started the bombardment with a double to center. Miller sacrificed Smith to third and Cruise drove him home with a single to center. Cruise stole second and scored on Betzel's wallop over second base. Betzel worked his way down to second via the delayed steal and came the rest of the way around when Hornsby drove a double through Westerzil. Gonzales sent Hornsby over with a single to right and took second on a throw to the plate. Meadows went out, but Bescher tore off a base knock to right field, scoring Cuban Mike. Bob was picked trying to beat his way down to second.

Steele Shows Fair Form.

Bobbie Steele and Lee Meadows did the hurling for the Cards. Steele let the home guard down without a hit in his first three frames, but weakened a bit in the next three and was found for five hits and one run. Meadows went to the hill in the seevnth and was nicked for a run in the eighth. He was lucky to get off that easy, a neat double killing, Hornsby to Betzel to Miller, clearing the atmosphere when the bases were loaded with nobody down.

The San Antonio management announces a brass band will be an added attraction at tomorrow's fracas.

After today's beating the local enthusiasts will need some cheering music.

Hug Glad to Get Away.

"The results of the last week for my ball club," remarked Manager Miller Huggins tonight, "have been negative as well as positive.

"On the negative side I might mention the acquisition of sore arms by Corhan, Snyder, Brottem, Lamline and Butler. Then, too, the excess of fine weather seems to have done a couple of the men—Hi Jasper, for one—more harm than good. There's such a thing as having too much good weather. That's the case here. We are fortunate to be getting away Monday. A change will do the men good. But I want to say that I am well pleased with the progress my club has made to date.

"Though I do not believe any of the boys with sore arms will be affected permanently, I'm not going to take any chances with them. I'm planning to take Butler to Houston to play short for the regulars in the games there. Corhan's sore arm, which is the worst of the lot, will be rested until I'm absolutely sure it is ready for service again.

"This fellow Steele looks better every day. Williams also looks like a real pitcher this spring. I've been using Steele at every opportunity and he's proved himself a regular horse for work. If he gets away to a good start he's liable to work in a bunch of games for me this season. I've needed a good, strong young left-hander of real merit for some time and I believe I have the man I'm looking for in Steele.

Has Faith in Bob Steele.

"This chap Smith looks like a gem of an outfielder. I've been watching him very closely ever since he joined the club last fall. He has all the action of a big league player, meets the ball nicely and seems sure of himself in the field. He has a fine arm, too. I'm planning to hold Hornsby as utility infielder. The way that young fellow is coming around sure is a treat. I've changed him to a free hitter and he's beginning to land on

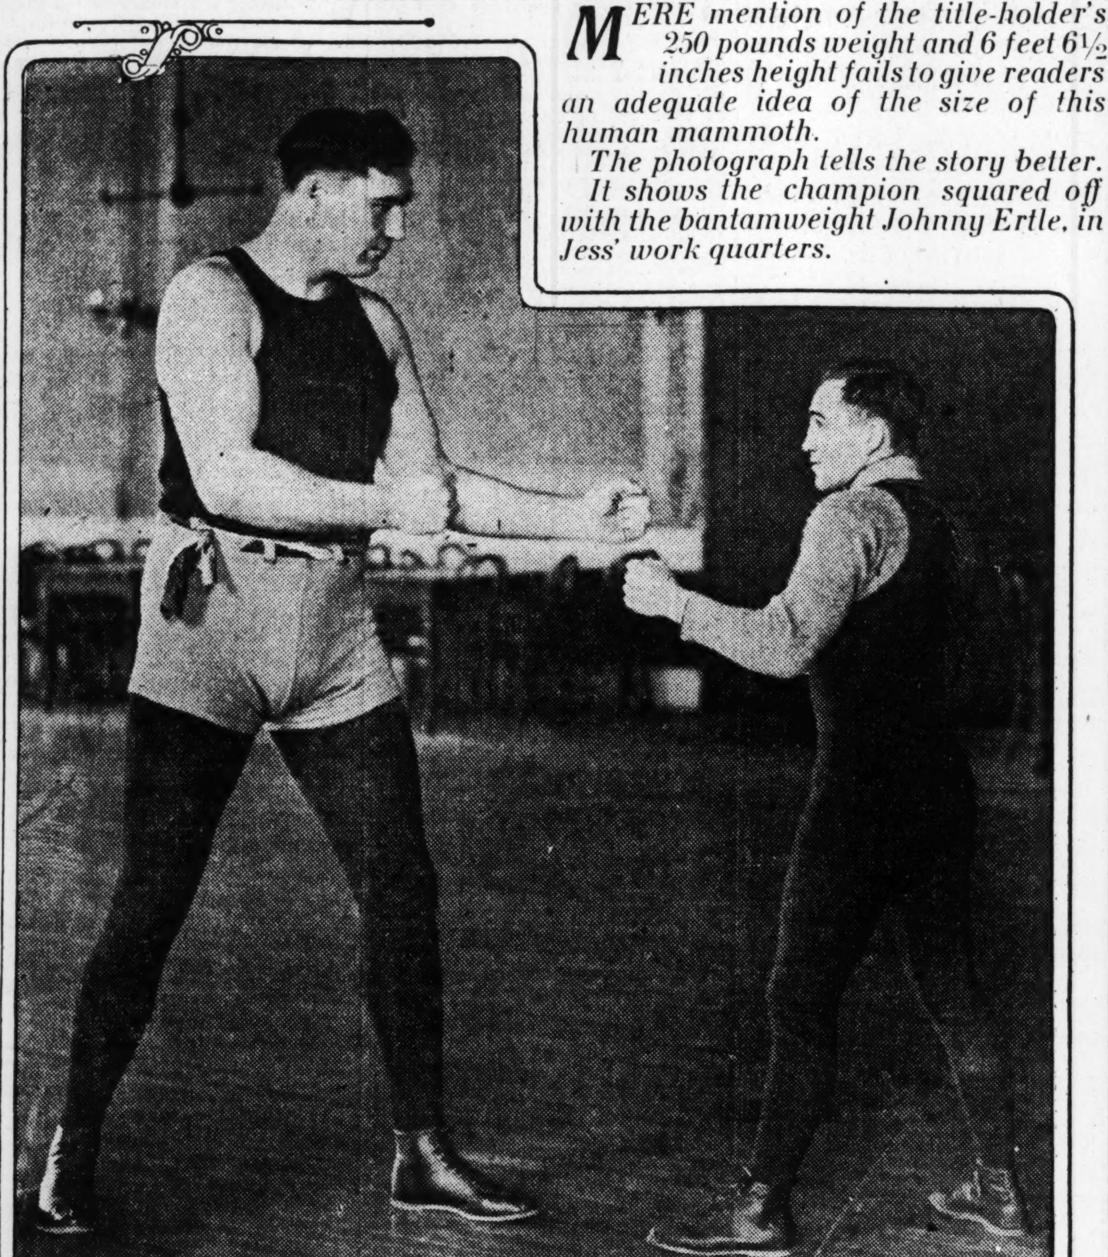
MERE mention of the title-holder's 250 pounds weight and 6 feet 6½ inches height fails to give readers an adequate idea of the size of this human mammoth.

The photograph tells the story better. It shows the champion squared off with the bantamweight Johnny Ertle, in Jess' work quarters.



JESS WILLARD, HEAVYWEIGHT CHAMPION,
JOHNNY ERTLE, BANTAMWEIGHT CHAMPION

Postponement of Willard Go Worked Hardship on Moran, Muldoon Thinks

Champion's Opponent Was at His Best Condition When Change of Date Was Made Public.

His Chief Trouble Now Is to Keep From Going Stale or Taking on Too Much Weight.

By William Muldoon,
Nationally Known as an Authority on Pugilism and Physical Training.

NEW YORK, March 18.

FRANK MORAN has been handicapped in his preparation for the 10-round bout with Jess Willard, the heavy-weight champion of the world, in Madison Square Garden, next Saturday, through the postponement from March 8 to March 25.

He trained up rather closely to the earlier date, and consequently had to let down a little after the struggle was moved along seventeen days. He is in good condition, however, and should be ready for his best effort on Saturday night.

Moran is not a success as an idler. Watchful waiting is not in his line. He is not too proud to fight. He cant' relax, sit still and rest; he is of a restless disposition, but cheerful. He has a bright, kindly eye, a square jaw, sandy complexion, white eyebrows, a keen sense of humor and a broad knowledge of human nature and things in general. He is quick to see the humorous side of the whole situation, particularly having greatness thrust upon him. He is not vain, and therefore it seems all the more a ridiculous joke to him.

Yet, at times his face takes on a serious expression and he seems to realize that, while he has no fear of Willard or anything that Willard might do to him, yet there is something beyond—a great responsibility.

He appreciates that the bout has assumed great proportions and that a generous public, perhaps even a foolish public, some men coming 1000 miles or more, is contributing something like $110,000 or $125,000 to see Frank Moran box ten rounds or as many rounds less as he finds necessary to defeat Jess Willard, who is recognized as the champion heavyweight boxer.

This is the responsibility that pops into Frank Moran's mind, in spite of his surroundings, and causes that serious expression, for a few moments on his pleasant face.

Moran Is Conscientious.

It is then that he feels his duty, and let me say that if I am any judge of character, this same Moran is of that type that has a keen sense of duty, an opinion and a will, that enables him to perform his duty as an act of respect to his fellow man.

When he feels that sense of duty come over him, his first thought is that he must do something, anything, to prepare himself for his best efforts, that he may not be a disappointment, and that is the critical point where his trainer must interfere.

Moran is fortunate in having Lewis and Hawkins as advisers. They have both been through the mill, and both have traveled the long, rugged, rough road, and suffered many hardships to reach the road of success which they made in the boxing profession.

Experience is a great teacher; there is none other to equal it. Moran was extremely generous with the management of the coming affair, and allowed them to fix the time any way they pleased, and he immediately took up the task of preparing himself to be ready at a moment's notice.

Moran Below Best Weight.

The day, as we all know, was to be March 8. Moran had a little superflous flesh, and he immediately went into a high, dry, extremely cold climate and indulged in severe out-of-door exercise, walking and running. The conditions of climate and hard work reduced him even below the weight that he should be for his best efforts.

Then the changing of the date left 17 days of time, which was a great advantage to Willard, but a disadvantage, or likely to be so, to Moran. Another unfavorable point, both principals agreed with the management of the affair to spend at least two weeks in the immediate vicinity of New York or in the city itself.

That agreement brought Moran to the city, which was not a good thing for him. But, to make the best of a bad job, he is taking just enough exercise to keep his lungs clear of fat, his joints supple and his muscles developed.

That all important point is to stir up nerve energy. This "something" called nerve energy is the motive power that runs the whole living body, enables or causes all the various organs to perform their proper functions. In fact, it is life itself.

It is a product of our living bodies and is produced in proportion to the health of the body—a good constitution, a quiet, restful temperament, perfect self-control, the ability to relax and rest. All this means a large production of nerve energy being stored up for emergencies.

The person who in repose looks like a dead one and apparently inert is likely to be the liveliest thing that ever happened, in action, mentally and physically. His mind is so alert and vigorous, made so by his great reserve of nerve that it directs every physical movement, and does so with such alertness, positiveness and good judgment, that we can say "There is a man, and at his best."

On the other hand, one of the greatest exhaustions of nerve energy is through the mind. Worriment, apprehension, doubt, suspicion, discontent and indecision simply throw away a great part of that most valuable asset. Then, again, there is the gourmand which exhausts a big percentage through the stomach, trying to adjust and dispose of large quantities of poorly masticated food.

Fortunately for Moran, he has none of these habits or weaknesses, excepting his ability to relax and to get the real rest, which means so much in this particular case.

But Lewis, his watchful, faithful trainer, has several schemes which he is putting in practice. I believe that Moran will be in condition to make his very best efforts on the night of March 25. He is in good hands, and any person in any walk of life who allows himself to believe for one moment any of the stories which are going about, that this contest will not be on its merit, is foolish, to say the least.

Both men will do their very best, and if that vast audience is disappointed, it will not be the fault of the boxers, but due to the fact that so much publicity has led the people to expect too much.

Ellis Has Not Announced Dates for His Title Match With Maupome, Local Star

Charles Ellis of Pittsburg, world's champion three-cushion player, has not as yet named the dates for his title match with Pierre Maupome, the Mexican, who is representing St. Louis in the Interstate Three-Cushion Billiard League. Ellis, though, will have to hurry, as he must notify the room-keeper who gets the match 10 days before it is played.

In a letter from the Brunswick-Balke company, in New York, Charley Peterson is informed that his offer has been forwarded to the new title holder and that to date no other offer has been made to the players. So there is more than an even chance that Ellis will defend his honors right here in St. Louis.

M'LOUGHLIN CAN'T BE BARRED UNDER OLD TENNIS RULE

Executive Committee Therefore Frames New Code to Reach "Amateurs."

BIG EVENT COMING HERE

Missouri Valley Sectional Doubles Tourney Awarded to Triple A.

NEW YORK, March 18.—The Executive Committee of the National Tennis Association today made public a proposed new amateur rule to be presented for adoption at the annual meeting of the association in 1917.

President G. T. Adee and other officials admitted that the present rule was so ambiguous it would be impossible under it to disbar Maurice E. McLoughlin, Thomas C. Bundy and W. M. Johnston, the Californians, or F. B. Alexander and Wallace F. Johnson in the East, because of their connection with the sporting goods business.

Two features stand out prominently in the new rule. It aims at the source of violation, by prescribing against the payment of expenses to players by clubs giving tournaments, unless permission is obtained from the Executive Committee.

It prohibits a player, engaged in the sporting goods business, from competing in an open tournament, match or championship, while so employed, but does not declare him a professional. Players may be disbarred who permit their names to be used for advertising purposes. These rules are not to become operative until April 1, 1918, if acepted at the annual meeting next year.

Reprieve Extended "Amateurs."

President Adee, explained that no action whatever was contemplated against players now engaged in the sporting goods business. Ample time was being given to men to enter another line of business, and it was believed this provision would make it possible to vote a perfect and comprehensive rule into the tennis code, he said.

The Executive Committee also arranged the schedule of tournaments which will be issued next week. The list contains 30 more tournaments than any previous year.

The newly-created Middle-Atlantic sectional doubles event was awarded to the Columbia Country Club, Chevy Chase, Md.; the Missouri Valley sectional doubles to the St. Louis Amateur Athletic Association; the Southwestern doubles to the Dallas Lawn Tennis Club, Dallas, Tex.

MISS MOLLA BJURSTEDT RETAINS TENNIS TITLE

NEW YORK, March 18.—Miss Molla Bjurstedt retained her woman's national indoor tennis championship here today by defeating Mrs. Frederick Schmitz of this city in the final match of the titular tournament on the courts of the Seventh Regiment Armory.

The hard-hitting girl from Norway won from Mrs. Schmitz in straight sets by scores of 6—2, 6—1.

Miss Bjurstedt and Miss Marie Wagner won the national doubles championship in straight sets. In the final of that event they defeated Mrs. Frederick Smith and Mrs. S. F. Weaver by the score of 6—2, 6—3.

The date of June 5 was awarded for the women's championship at the Philadelphia Cricket Club.

The national association offered a perpetual trophy for the public parks' municipal team championship for competition each year.

All but Gallery Tickets for Big Battle Are Sold

Commission Approves Promoters' Arrangements—Willard Works Hard.

NEW YORK, March 18.—Chairman Wenck of the New York State Athletic Commission stated today that the arrangements made by the management of Madison Square Garden and by the promoters of the Willard-Moran bout, which is to be fought here next Saturday, are satisfactory in every detail to himself and the other two commissioners.

He expressed gratification at the manner in which the sale of tickets had been conducted. He felt assured, he said, that the police arrangements as well as the enforcement of the non-smoking rule, issued by Fire Commissioner Adamson, would insure the safety of the spectators and preclude, as far as possible, unfavorable criticism.

The sale of tickets has been so brisk that every seat has been disposed of with the exception of the gallery reservations which will be put on sale next Thursday.

No tickets will be sold at the box office on the day of the bout and no one without a ticket will be allowed to pass the police lines that evening.

Willard took a brisk walk and a couple of short runs in Central Park this morning. Later he went through about 10 minutes with the pulleys, punching the bag and shadow boxing. He boxed three rounds each with Hemple, Monahan and Rodel and then wrestled with Rodel for three minutes. The champion was fast all the way.

BUFFALO, N. Y., March 18.—The University of Michigan relay team defeated Cornell in a closely contested two-mile race at the Seventy-Fourth Regiment Armory here tonight. The time, 7m. 56 3-5s., is a new intercollegiate mark for the distance on an indoor track.

WEAR RETAINS RACQUET HONORS BEATING WELLS

Arthur Y. Wear retained the racquet championship of the Racquet Club, defeating L. P. Wells in the final yesterday afternoon, three games to one. Wells was the winner in the second. The scores were 15—8, 15—18, 15—11 and 15—2. Wear also landed the honors last year.

The squash championship tourney opens this week. Eddie Limberg is the present title holder.

Athletes Entered in Meet Here Next Saturday Won Eight Firsts Last Night

ATHLETES who are scheduled to take part in the Missouri A. A. meet here next Saturday night won eight firsts in meets held last night. Joe Loomis, national sprint champion, and Mike Mason, the Illinois U. captain, were the individual stars, both capturing two firsts.

Loomis finished ahead of the field in the 60-yard dash in the senior A. A. U. championships in New York, while he also won the high jump. Mason won the one and two mile runs in the conference meet at Evanston and, incidentally, set a new record in both.

Joie Ray landed the two-mile run in the senior championships. The other winners were: Ames in the 60-yard conference hurdles, Dismond in the 440-yard run and Culp of Illinois in the pole vault.

Besides this, Hohman, Illinois U., who will appear here, finished second in the sprint in Evanston, while Ivan Myers landed fourth in the senior A. A. U. 1000-yard run.

NEW YORK, March 18.—Jo Loomis, national outdoor sprint champion of the Amateur Athletic Union, clinched the 60-yards indoor title, too, tonight when he led the field which included R. F. Morse, Howard Drew and Irving Howe, all negroes, to the tape in 6 3-5s., equalling the record.

In a previous meeting two of these colored sprinters, Drew and Morse, had beaten Loomis. But the "white hope" sprinter was at his best tonight, with his 10-foot stride reaching further than ever.

Morse was the runner-up and Drew third.

Among the other surprises of earlier competition tonight was the defeat of Dave Caldwell in the 1000 yards race. John Overton, Yale, and Homer Baker of New York, unattached, finished in front of him in 2m. 15 2-5s time, which also equals the record.

One of the features of the meet was the winning of the two-mile walk by George H. Goulding of Toronto, who lapped the field and established a new world's record of 13m. 37s.

Joe W. Ray of the Illinois A. C. of Chicago, national one-mile champion, won the two-mile run. He assumed the lead at three-quarters, but relinquished it a half mile further on. He sprinted in the final lap and won by 10 yards.

S. D. Rose of the Boston A. A., last year's 300-yard champion, fell in his heat for that event, the final of which was won by A. B. Kelly of Holy Cross College.

Following are the summaries:

LAVAN'S DOUBLES WIN VICTORY FOR JONES' REGULARS

Park and Koob Pitch Good Ball—George Sisler Fails to Get a Hit, Although Facing the Enemy Pitchers Five Times.

By W. J. O'Connor.
Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., March 18.—Dr. John Lavan tightened his grip on the shortstopping assignment under Fielder Jones, today, when he etched two timely doubles into the box score against Memphis and largely contributed to a Brown victory, 9—4, in the first of a four-game series here. John Park and Earnie Koob pitched and both were effective. Upwards of 2500 fans attended.

Memphis scored its first two runs off Park on an infield double after a previous error by Austin had opened the way for this successful attack. In the course of the afternoon, Austin committed another fielding break, but he delivered a pinch single that scored two runs and, in the end, eraced every blot from his escutcheon.

The one disappointing feature was the batting, or rather the lack of batting, by George Sisler, the Michigan marvel. Sisler struck out three times, against left-hand hurlers, was beaned once and lost a double in his final desperate effort when Pete Knisely, a reformed Cub, speared a line drive at his shoe tops.

Hartley officiated continuously behind the bat and demeaned himself like a world's champion backstop. It was his two-base hit in the second inning which incited a Brown rally, eventuating in six runs. And this hit was precisely the nicest bit of baseball of the day. It was a Jones strategem.

Jones Avoids a Trap.

Barton had opened this inning with a walk. Merritt, the prime pitcher of the Memphians, last season, was wild and also passed Austin. Then Runt Walsh, who played with the 1915 Terriers, baited a nice trap that was promptly discovered by Fielder Jones' sixth sense instinct. Walsh designed to have Hartley, who is slow, bunt and play a force of Borton at third. Jones quickly conceived a way to beat Runt at his own game.

He instructed Hartley to hit the first ball, although the alien pitcher was wild enough to push only one strike over on the two previous batters, but Hartley is death to a fast ball and when Merritt served it up waist high Grover pulled it down the left field foul line for two bases, scoring Borton and Austin. Lavan rushed in with another double, a screecher, to left center and Hartley scored. Park was safe on a fielder's choice but was forced by Shotton at second, Lavan scoring. Tobin sifted a Texas leaguer to left, while Sisler was beaned. Pratt walked, choking the sacks and Borton's richly earned second pass of the inning, forced Shotton over.

George Kerr, a St. Louis boy, and also a southpaw, went to the hurling hill for the enemy in the fourth and promptly fanned Sisler as a starter. Jack McNulty, who stopped a straight fast one from Jack O'Connor's shoulder, helped out, by calling a bad one on the Michigan marvel. Then, however, successive singles by Pratt, Borton and Austin, the latter a hit-and-run affair, scored two runs. From that time on the Browns didn't get anything that remotely resembled a hit off Kerr, who is considered some pumpkins, in these parts.

Koob Yields Run in the Ninth, Shows Fine Burst of Speed in Pinches

THE enemy counted as follows: Hemingway, an ex-Brownie, opened the game with a walk. Manager Stark sacrificed and Knisely was safe on Austin's low throw to Borton, Hemingway scoring. Runt Walsh's out advanced Knisely and he scored when Ray Grimes' line drive bounced off Park's glove and netted two bases.

Pete Knisely's home run in the sixth was the third and last hit off Park. Koob was found for a run in the ninth when "Muddy" Ruel, another Brown discard, doubled with two out, scoring Ray Grimes. A pinch hitter then fanned before Koob's speed.

The Memphis club is owned by Russell E. Gardner of St. Louis and presided over by Jack Watkins, his son-in-law. The team is the best the Browns have seen on their tour, although two of the regulars haven't yet reported. Kerr and Ruel are St. Louis boys. Hemingway, Walsh and Tillman were secured from the Browns. Another pitcher is sought.

Babe Borton looked like American money in Mexico when he singled in the fourth. Pratt's dash for second had pulled Stark out of position and Babe punched a single through short. However, in the American League the shortstop will never cover when Borton is up with the hit-and-run on. Borton is almost a dead left-field hitter.

Two doubles and a single for John Lavan. Boy, please page Ernie Johnson.

Muddy Ruel got into the box score after Andreen, the regular Memphis catcher, had been injured. Muddy didn't look any too well. The Browns swiped five bases on him.

"Borton hits at fewer bad balls than any man I ever have seen," said Fielder Jones last week. Babe walked three times and combed one hit, finishing with a .500 mark.

Park committed a weird balk in the first inning. He totally forgot himself and feigned a throw to second after starting his windup. It was so ludicrous that he laughed at himself. Thereafter he looked good. Knisely's homer into the short left-field bleachers was the only real hit he allowed.

A sacrifice, a single and a walk for Tobin gave him a .333 swat average. He fanned once. The Browns turned two double plays, not to mention one that Umpire Morgan missed.

The umps were hard on the Browns, but Jones was winning by such a comfortable margin that he didn't protest. He didn't go to the coaching line after the fourth inning. He was out there in the second, though, yelling his head off.

"You only get one chance to really win a game," says Fielder, "and when that opportunity comes you better take advantage of it." He did.

Shotton was five feet past first base in the seventh inning when Umpire Morgan called him out on a throw from Stark. It was the weirdest decision of the day.

Brownie Seconds Land Game From Denison After Ten Frames, 14-13

DENISON, Tex., March 18.

THE Browns second team opened its stand here this afternoon and was returned the winner over the local Western Association, 14 to 13, after 10 innings of battling. It was a slugging game, the major leaguers connecting for 13 safe wallops, while the locals hammered the Brown pitchers to parts unoccupied 20 times. Several bad errors, though, kept the locals from winning.

After getting off to a good lead, the Browns took things easy. But during this time, the Denison batters were hustling and when the last half of the ninth rolled around the two were deadlocked, with 12 runs apiece. In the extra session, the "big boys" put on a little speed and sent a pair of runs across, while Denison was able to get only one.

George Baumgardner, who is generally accepted as a pitcher, worked in the outfield and in the sixth inning got in the way of a pitched ball that laid him low for a few moments. He was only slightly injured and will be able to resume hostilities tomorrow, when the same teams play.

"Tillie" Walker, the only regular outfielder in the game, had his eye on the ball, connecting for two safeties, one of them a home run. Charley Deal, who later on will fight it out with Jimmy Austin for the third sacking job, rapped out three safeties. Several other Browns also connected for a pair of raps.

Southpaw Earl Hamilton, Tim McCabe and Tom Phillips did the hurling for the Browns. None of them cut loose to any extent, which is the real reason for the 20 base hits for the locals. For Denison, Blass, a right hander, made the best showing.

Unfortunate Conflict With M. A. A. Meet Will Interfere With Attendance.

UNKNOWNS AT F. C. A. C.

Neither Taylor Nor McNeill Have Records That Impress, Clippings Show.

By Harry S. Sharpe,
Referee for the Future City Athletic Club and the Post-Dispatch's Boxing Authority.

Tommy Sullivan has matched Jimmy Taylor of New York and Benny McNeill of Windsor, Canada, for the main event of next Tuesday night's show at the Future City Athletic Club. The boxers are bantamweights and have agreed upon 118 pounds for their bout.

McNeill and Taylor are young men, and have reputations, so they claim, as A1 glove fighters in their own home towns. They are brand-new to St. Louis, and but little is known of them here. The records of neither one appear in the regular sport annuals, but this is also quite true of a number of good men in the boxing game.

Taylor and McNeill submit a list of men they have boxed, but as no dates are appended of when they were boxed, it is impossible to judge whether they are improving or going back. The accomplishments of boxers are not printed in this column unless they can be verified and known to be authentic.

Persons who have seen this pair in action say they are capable boxers of much aggressiveness and are sure to please, and the chances are they will make good. They are very enthsiastic about themselves, so it may be that they are coming champions. However, a little more information of what they have actually accomplished, and when they did it, would be appreciated.

Record Not Impressive.

In the list of bouts submitted by Taylor, it is noticed that he lost 15-round bouts to "Kid" Williams and Al Shubert and on a foul to Frankie Burns in the seventh round. All the other bouts referred to were no-decision affairs and there is nothing to indicate whether Taylor had the better of them, or what happened, except that they went the limit. Among these were bouts with such well-known boxers as "Young" Marino, "Knockout" Eggers, "Battling" Reddy, Mickey Dunn, "Young" O'Leary, "Battling" Lahn, Jimmy Murray, "Louisiana," Eddie O'Keefe, "Kid" Herman and Tommy O'Toole. Any boxer who could have battled this sort must have been good, even though he only stayed the limit.

Mc Neill comes from Bristol, England, having been born there Aug. 1, 1892, and claims to have had 23 bouts before starting for Canada, winning 14 of them by a knockout. In 1912, according to the record submitted by him, McNeill knocked out Freddie ("Kid") Williams in the third round for the bantamweight championship of Canada. His last bout was with Chick Hayes at Hamilton, Ontario, a 10-round, no decision contest that went the limit, but McNeill has clippings to show that he carried off the honors.

The semi-final will be between Ivan Chandler of Granite City, Ill., and Tommy Fitzgerald of Pittsburg, Pa., eight rounds at 128 pounds. The preliminaries will be furnished by Mickey Kelly and Fred Lewis, six rounds at 140 pounds, and "Red" Watkins and Benny Feust, six rounds at 130 pounds.

Trendall Date Unchanged.

Matchmaker Matt Sofka announces that the South Broadway A. C. will not advance or defer the date of the bout between Harry Trendall and "Sailor" Jerabek, which is scheduled for the same night that the M. A. A. gives its athletic meet at the Coliseum. The South Broadway organization was importuned to step aside for the M. A. A. that night, but declined to do so.

This is an unfortunate conflict, because the athletic meet is bound to attract many who will be obliged to forego the pleasure of witnessing the contest between Trendall and Jerabek, and local fans view the bout between these two as an important one, because it may mark the ending of Trendall's career as a prominent factor in local ring affairs. Should the "Pride of the Patch" lose this bout to Jerabek no one will concede him a chance to come back, and it will be known that his recent defeat by Ted Lewis marked the end of a long and successful reign as a local champion.

An athletic meet such as is contemplated by the M. A. A. is given only at long intervals and at great expense, and is very beneficial in a general way to all athletic sports, and boxing indirectly reaps its full share. A successful meet will reflect credit upon all concerned, and there is not an athletic club in the city but what will share some of the benefits.

According to Matchmaker Sofka, the South Broadway club takes the view that the Trendall-Jerabek bout will not interfere with the M. A. A. meet, and that the meet will not affect attendance at the bout. This may be true, but a spirit is lacking on this occasion that would be welcomed and praised by followers of sport in this city.

Johnston Meets Vanek.

As a prelude to the bout between Trendall and Jerabek, the South Broadway A. C. has matched Charles ("Red") Johnston and Charles ("Kid") Vanek for eight rounds, at 115 pounds. This should prove to be very interesting.

Johnston, Willie Colona and Vanek are former amateurs in the same class, between whom there is much rivalry. Colona has twice defeated Johnston within the past month. The first time he won Referee Eddie Randall's decision at the end of eight rounds at the South Broadway A. C., and about 10 days later lost on a foul in the fourth round. In the last bout, however, Johnston was outboxing his rival.

Colona and Vanek met in an amateur tournament given by the South Broadway A. C. on March 13, 1915, and on that occasion the judges disagreed at the end of the fourth round, and Referee George Kirkwood gave the decision to Vanek. It was a close bout and the decision was very questionable. Some time afterwards Colona and Vanek met before the Keokuk A. C., and Colona is said to have had the better of the bout.

The foregoing will show how closely Johnston and Vanek are matched and a hard contest is expected when they meet next Saturday night.

Two beginners were seen at the Future City A. C. last Tuesday night who give promise of doing much better if given a chance. They were Charles Nelson and Tommy Cleary, in the 118-pound class. The former defeated Eddie O'Brien, and in doing so displayed much class for a youngster the first time on. Cleary is a tall, slender lad, of erect position in the ring, very cool under fire, and displayed straight left and right punches that would have done credit to any boxer. His judgment of distance was splendid and enabled him to stop the rushes of Jack Hart with apparent ease and made him a good-looking winner.

Missouri's Crack Hurdle Jumper Will Have to Do His Best to Beat Starr

Cornell's Timber-Topper, Like Other Athletes Coming for Saturday's Local Games, Ranks With the East's Best.

ITHACA, N. Y., March 18.

SIX of the crack athletes of Cornell's great track team are to take part in the indoor meet to be held here by the Missouri Athletic Association next Saturday.

Coach Jack Moakley, who will, in all probability, accompany the party, has decided to enter Windnagle, Potter, Starr, Beckwith, Shelton and Bartsch.

A relay team will represent Cornell, and a number of entries in individual events will be made.

This group of athletes includes three of Cornell's greatest stars, Potter, Windnagle and Starr.

Potter is rated by Jack Moakley as one of the greatest intercollegiate distance runners he has ever developed. Moakley ranks him with Tell, Berna and John Paul Jones. Potter won the two-mile championship at the intercollegiate meet last spring, and for several years has been one of the most prominent cross-country runners in the East, having won the individual championship in the race a year ago last fall.

Windnagle, who entered Cornell from Oregon, where he had already made a reputation as a middle-distance runner, is the fastest mile and half-mile runner in the university. His outdoor mark for the half-mile is a shade better than 1m. 56s. Last year he finished second in the mile race at the intercollegiate meet. He is also one of Cornell's greatest cross-country runners.

Starr a Crack Hurdler.

F. H. Starr is one of the best hurdlers in the Eastern college world today. Only a few nights ago he won first honors in the 70-yard high hurdle race, in the annual indoor games of the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America held in Madison Square Garden, New York. Last spring he earned second place in the 120-yard high hurdles in the championship games, and is at present a logical favorite for high hurdle honors in the meets of the coming spring.

Beckwith, Shelton and Bartsch have not yet made such reputations for themselves in college of athletics as the first three, but all are regarded as coming stars. Beckwith is being groomed by Jack Moakley for the half-mile. He has been developing gradually, until it seems certain that he will be a factor at this distance in the spring meets.

Bartsch has done his best work as a sprinter, but this winter he has shown much promise as a quarter-mile runner on the mile and medley relay team. He was shut out of the semi-finals in the 220-yard dash at the last intercollegiate games, but so rapid has been his improvement since he began training this winter that Jack Moakley is very hopeful of his winning a place in the 220 in the championship games this year.

Shelton's Brothers Famous.

Shelton, another athlete who will run in the St. Louis meet, is the third and youngest of a trio of Cornell athletes of the same family. His oldest brother, Arthur, was a crack hurdler and captained the Cornel team which won permanent possession of the intercollegiate trophy cup in 1914. His second brother, Murray, was the unanimous choice of the critics for right end on the all-American football team last fall, being one of the greatest ends ever developed at Ithaca. The younger brother is a sprinter and quarter-miler of rare promise and Coach Moakley is confident that he will develop into a quarter-miler of national reputation.

Bush Says Tigers Fear Groom More Than They Do Carl Weilman

By W. J. O'Connor,
Of the Post-Dispatch Sport Staff.

MEMPHIS, TENN., March 18.

CARL WEILMAN won eight games from the Tigers last season, but he's by no means the most feared of Jones' hurlers. The Jungaleers have even more respect for Bob Groom, a reformed Federal Leaguer.

"Groom has had our nanny tethered as long as I can remember," said Donie Bush to the writer in Waxahachie the other day, "and if it's true that Bob has his usual spring start, we may find him more troublesome than Weilman. Personally, I never thought he had much stuff, but he simply had it on us. He invariably had Ty and Sam dead when he was with Washington and I couldn't hit the size of my hat against him when he was with Griff."

We print this as a prelude to the statement that Hughey Jennings either is a victim of the Waxahachie heat or an unscrupulous writer when he is quoted as saying that the Browns are to be catalogued with Cleveland and Philadelphia in the also-ran class in advance of the American League derby. This statement is getting wide circulation under Hughey quotes in the South.

There are many experts who are loath to believe that the Tigers will be potent factors, in the coming season. These are persons who fear that Sam Crawford will begin to retrograde and they are unanimous in their contention that the psychological effect of Sam's withdrawal will be disastrous to Jennings' tribe.

Its Up to Sam Crawford.

"Detroit is one club I figure may back away from the pace this season," said Miller Huggins the other night. "I don't fancy the possibility of Crawford coming through with another big season and I don't fancy Hughie's hurlers.

"Furthermore, he has a team which is temperamentally unfit to weather any tough breaks. An injury to Cobb or the disability of Dauss or Coveleskie at the start of the season would entirely unfit the club for the race that is promised in that league. The reserve strength isn't there."

But how different on the Browns! Here we have a team of kids, all fired with the ambition of a lifetime—a chance to break into the pennant scramble—and all dominated by a manager who stands absolutely no chance of losing control. There is no disciplinarian in either league the equal of Fielder Jones. Even McGraw doesn't hold the whip-hand like the Brown manager. He's more the boss than anyone we ever have seen and he'll continue as such.

But the world appreciates the fact that Jones has a tough proposition in trying to break into first division. However, Jennings concludes his disparaging remarks on the Browns with the statement that "Jones may have some pretty tight pitching." If that's true, Fielder wishes to be taken at his word: "I'll win or quit the game."

Pitching is what worries Jones most.

All Interested in Sisler.

Going from the Browns' camp to Marlin Springs, where the Giants hold forth, we were confronted with this question from McGraw: "What's Jones going to do with Sisler?"

The next day we ran into Jimmy Burke, assistant to Hughie Jennings. Jimmy queried: "Where's he going to play Sisler?"

Paul Shannon, a Boston baseball writer, who is touring the training camps, put the same question. Then up popped Miller Huggins.

"He's not going to keep Sisler on the bench?" asked Hug.

And so it goes. Everybody seems to be vitally interested in the future of the Michigan marvel, for as Jimmy Burke says: "Sisler is one of those players you'll bump into once in 10 years."

And the baseball world is patiently awaiting Jones' ultimate decision. McGraw points out the fact that Bob Wallace was a pretty promising young pitcher, but he showed so much as a shortstop that it was deemed advisable to have him in the box score daily. Eventually he was. But Fielder Jones says:

"You win your ball games in a pinch. There's usually, in fact almost invariably, only one inning when you need a punch. You may need that on the hurling hill or at bat. I think Sisler will be a good man to have in reserve for the pinch punch. He looks like he has it."

Sisler prefers a daily assignment. He wants to be in every game. He's a glutton for work, but the Michigan marvel is working for Jones, and Fielder is Boss—with a capital B.

BLOUIN AND ROLFE TAKE SIXTH PLACE IN A. B. C.

TOLEDO, O., March 18.—A collection of good bowling stars went down in defeat today in a futile attempt on their part to supplant the leaders in the minor events of the American Bowling Congress tournament. None of the four leaders were dislodged, the best challenge being the sixth place landed by Jimmy Blouin and Bob Rolfe, with 1230. Billy Metcalf of Chicago made 646 for tenth place in the singles and ran sixth in the all-events with 1844.

Bob Rolfe, opened his last game with seven straight strikes, narrowly missing an eighth when the No. 7 stuck on a good shot. Blouin carried the pair with 619.

THREE CARDINALS ARE BATTING .300 IN EARLY BATTLES

Charley Hall, a Pitcher, Leads Huggins' Troupe With an Average of .385.

CORHAN HITTING .333

Brottem, Recruit Catcher, With .308, Is Only Other in the Select Circle.

The recruits with whom Miller James Huggins expects to mold the Cardinals into a regular ball club are not knocking down the fences in Texas. In fact, on the hitting done in the games to date, Huggins' squad looks like the weakest that has ever been put together. For instance—Charley Hall, a pitcher, is the leading batter with a .385. "Sea Lion" has made five bingles in 13 trips to the plate.

Just two others are hitting better than .300. They are Roy Corhan, who is expected to prove a whirlwind at short, and Tony Brottem, who may be retained as third catcher. Corhan is hitting .333, while Brottem owns a mark of .308.

Frank Snyder, Tommy Long, Bob Bescher and the other reputed sluggers are away down in the .200 figures. Here are the Cards' early season batting marks:

NAME.	AB.	R.	H.	Av.
Hall	13	2	5	.385
Corhan	12	2	4	.333
Brottem	13	3	4	.308

Cleveland Lowers Prices.

The new owners of the Cleveland club of the American League no sooner had taken charge of the team, when a new scale of prices for the games this season went into effect. With Charley Somers as owner, box seats at the Indians' Park set a fan back $1.25. Instead of 25 jitneys it will be only 20 the coming campaign.

What's more, there will be no more reserved seats in the grandstand. All of them will go for 75 cents, and will entitle a fan to sit anywhere he pleases. These prices will go Saturdays, Sundays, holidays and any old day.

And all this is happening with the baseball war over, and the Indians the only club after patronage in Cleveland.

Johnny Evers, the spark plug of the Braves, is ready to start the season. In a recent practice game between the Regulars and Yannigans, all the keystone king did was to crack out four bingles in as many trips to the plate. He also scored a run, and swiped a base. In the field he handled seven of eight chances cleanly. With Johnny in there every day, the Braves will be hard to beat in the coming N. L. race.

Walter Johnson Is Ready.

Walter Johnson, the National's right-hander, is going about his spring training entirely different this season. In former campaigns he always went slow. Right now he's buzzing the mover in mid-season form. He pulled this stunt for 20 minutes at Charlottesville last week, and had Catcher Williams yelling for help before it was over.

To date Manager Griffith has not regretted the fact that he has passed Gandil along to the Indians. Judge, the International League recruit, is hitting the ball hard and fielding in sensational fashion in the training camp games.

Joe Oeschger, the pitcher recalled from the International League by the Phillies, is expected to be one of the regulars of Pat Moran's staff the coming season. At least, Moran intends to start out with Oeschger as a regular. Alexander and Mayer will be two of the others. Chief Bender, the former Athletic star, will have to fight for a place, as will Karl Adams, obtained from the Cubs, Demaree and Rixey.

Mason Sets Two Records in Helping Illinois Win Indoor Conference Meet

EVANSTON, Ill., March 18.—Mike Mason broke two conference indoor records, helping Illinois win the Big Nine meet in Patten Gymnasium, Evanston, tonight. The elongated runner from Urbana won the mile in 4m. 24s., breaking the record set by Leroy Campbell of Chicago last year, and lowered his own mark in the two-mile by doing the distance in 9m. 43 4-5s. Arlie Mucks, Wisconsin's strong man, set a conference meet record in the shot put, with a heave of 48 ft. 7½ inches. The meet was full of thrills and wound up with one of the greatest exhibitions of running ever seen, when Bingo Dismond, the Chicago negro, overcame a 30-yard lead bequeathed to Hobman of Illinois in the relay, ran the final quarter in 51 seconds, and won for the Maroons in 3m. 34s., tying the Big Nine indoor mark.

Pershing of Chicago turned a surprise in winning the 50-yard dash in record time, and three entrants in the hurdles tied the mark.

The summaries:

M. A. A. TEAM TACKLES UNION A. C. FOR TITLE

The Missouri A. A. and Union A. C. basket ball teams, who are at present tied for the leadership in the Northern Division of the A. A. U. League fight it out for supremacy at the M. A. A. gymnasium tomorrow night. The winner of the clash tomorrow will land the pennant. Both teams have been strengthened in the past few weeks and a close contest should result.

DELANEY DOESN'T WANT LOOMIS TO RUN AT COLISEUM

C. A. A. Athletic Director Gives No Reason for Desire to Withdraw.

TOM WATTS GETS BUSY

Writes President of C. A. A., While Hutsell at Present Is in Windy City.

When the Illinois Alumni of St. Louis got busy and had the deans of the college relent on their ruling not to allow the Illini athletes to compete in the Missouri A. A. meet next Saturday night, the Cherry Diamond officials figured that everything was settled and they could rest in peace. But it was not to be that way. No sooner had one wrangle been righted when up bobbed another.

This time it was not with a college, but with an athletic club, and it has to do with such a star as Joe Loomis, national 100 yards champion. Martin Delaney, the Chicago A. A. coach has written Tom Watts Jr., a letter stating that if possible he would like to forsake the St. Louis trip. And all this after his entries had been mailed.

But if Watts has anything to do with it, Loomis and the other C. A. A. stars will be here. Instead of communicating with Delaney, Watts got busy and wrote to the president of the Chicago A. A. Word is expected in the next few days. Wilbur Hutsell, the M. A. A. coach is at present in Chicago conferring with Chicago A. A. officials.

In his letter Delaney assigned no reasons why he wished to pass up the local meet. The Cherry Diamond has made all its plans and is featuring Loomis, in fact has been for the past two weeks, in a special 50 with Mahl, Aronson and Renick. So Delaney's stars are badly needed.

Delaney Gives No Reason.

Another wrangle, this with the A. A. U., was cleared up the past week. The A. A. U. officials did not like the idea of a Turnverein relay race on the program. But after much wrangling they decided to allow the race to go as scheduled because it was a closed event. So the Turners will get a chance to fight it out for supremacy.

The invitation program arranged by the Cherry Diamond officials is one of the best that has ever been booked by a local club, at least in the last few years. There are six events in which the stars of the country will fight it out for leading honors. The feature ones from a local standpoint will be the 50 yards dash and the pole vault, in which athletes wearing colors of St. Louis clubs are entered.

In the special 50, Irwin Mahl and Gus Aronson, the C. A. C. stars, will fight it out with Loomis and Renick, the latter a Missouri U. star. Then the pole vault, F. W. Floyd, the latest addition to the M. A. A. team, will oppose Foss, the East's best and others.

But the others are not to be overlooked. Bob Simpson, who only Friday night set a record of 5 4-5 seconds in the 50-yard low hurdles, will carry the colors of Missouri U. against Packer of Iowa, Ames of Illinois and Starr of Cornell. The 440-yard run will feature Ted Meredith and Binga Dismond, the colored flyer of the Chicago U. outfit, while Joie Ray, national two-mile champion, will face the starter's gun in the mile race.

"Record-Breaker" Simpson.

The medley relay race between Pennsylvania and Cornell should be another good attraction. On the Penn team there will be Howard Berry, one of the best allround athletes in the country. There also will be four open A. A. U. events: two for high schools, the Hess 880 and seven relay races. Quite an attractive program.

Paddy Fitzgerald, the Columbian A. C. coach last night announced his complete list of starters for the meet. Mahl and Aronson will be in the special 50. They'll also be entered in the open 50 along with Gray and Beck. There will be three starters in the 600, three in the 1000 and one in the high jump. The C. A. C. entries are as follows:

Special 50—Mahl and Aronson.
Open 50—Mahl, Aronson, Gray and Beck.
600-yard run—Bob Probst, Puchta and Murray.
1000-yard run—Asakainen, Hutmeyer and Edwards.
High jump—Ruff.

C. A. C. Entries Named.

The entry lists close tonight and the complete number of starters will be announced next week. Principia Academy has entered a team in the high school events, to wit: Colvin, McCandless and Noble in the 50, Ferguson in the Hess 880, while the relay team will be made up of Kittle, Colvin, Herring, McCandless with Kaw as substitute.

The invitation race entries are as follows:

Special 50-yard dash—Irwin Mahl, C. A. C.; Gus Aronson, C. A. C.; Joe Loomis, C. A. A.; Earl Renick, Missouri U.
Hurdle race—Simpson, Missouri U.; Packer, Iowa; Ames, Illinois; Starr, Cornell.
Pole vault—Floyd, M. A. A.; Foss, Cornell; Culp, Illinois; Knourek, I. A. C.
440-yard run—Meredith, Pennsylvania; Dismond, Chicago U.; Daggy, Missouri; Niedorp, Missouri; Dodky, Kansas.
Mile run—Ray, I. A. C.; Myers, I. A. C.; Mason, Illinois; Windnagle, Cornell; Herriott, Kansas; Marceau, C. A. A.
Penn-Cornell medley relay—Cornell team: Bartsch, Shelton, Windnagle and Beckwith; Penn team: Scudder, Lennon, Berry and Pope.

The following have reserved boxes for the meet next Saturday: Schuyler P. Britton, William Connett, Norton Newcomb, Thomas Grace, W. H. Kaye, O. H. Greene, R. L. Niedringhaus, Thomas Watts, R. L. Leacock, J. A. Nugent, H. C. Grunner, L. Jones, D. M. Clark, C. C. Peterson, J. M. Ford Jr., Dr. R. Gradwohl, H. Sullivan, M. Petring, F. W. Irland, A. C. Einstein, E. J. Medart, C. H. Loessig, E. F. Kearney, H. Rape, W. M. Louderman, J. W. Garneau, R. M. Bates, R. W. Boisseleir, G. H. Petring, D. L. Parrish, G. C. Stinde and C. H. Schlapp.

He's only a kid, you know, 20 years old, but he's got the stuff in him. "Pep" is a fighter, too, one of the aggressive kind that is always a big help to a ball club.

"All in all, it's been a mighty good training trip so far. If we are lucky enough to run into good weather in St. Louis we will go to the bat when the National League season opens in mighty fine shape for a hard battle all the way."

Huggins also announced that Cozey Dolan, the outfielder whom nobody seems to want because of his $4750 contract for 1916, would be given an opportunity to buy his release from the Cardinals within the next few days.

Kilbane Forfeits Right to Honors, Says Stakeholder

Chaney Can Now Claim and Defend Featherweight Title, Claims Phillie Expert.

PHILADELPHIA, March 18.—By all the unwritten law of the American ring, Johnny Kilbane has forfeited his title as the featherweight champion, writes Bill Rocap, official stakeholder, in the Philadelphia Public Ledger today. His refusal to honor his agreement to meet George Chaney in Baltimore on Friday night in a 15-round contest for the world's championship gives Chaney the right to claim the title and to defend it. Kilbane now goes into the discard. Both the ex-champion and his manager, Jimmy Dunn, are labeled contract-breakers and American sportsmen will regard them as such.

Chaney is now the logical champion and should be so considered. Both he and and his manager signed articles of agreement Dec. 24, 1915, for a 15-round contest which stipulated that it was to be for the world's title.

At the prescribed time, Feb. 17, one month before the date of the bout, Chaney's manager, Henry Bletzer, deposited $1000 with the sporting editor of the Public Ledger to bind the match, and as a guarantee for weight and appearance. Kilbane failed to honor his part of the pact.

The American Athletic Club of Baltimore, which was to stage the contest in a State Armory, not only received official permission for the bout, but had the Baltimore authorities sanction a decision being given and an outside referee appointed in order to appease Kilbane.

After giving his word and placing his name to articles of agreement, Kilbane "quit cold." The club and Chaney honored their agreement to the letter, and the plucky, stout-hearted Baltimore featherweight is entitled to the reward. Kilbane has merited his punishment.

Sportsmen should welcome Chaney as the new featherweight kind, for he has made ex-Champion Kilbane quit before they boxed a single round.

44 TEAMS ENTERED IN PUBLIC SCHOOL LEAGUE THIS YEAR

Winner of Championship Will Receive Post-Dispatch Trophy Now Held by Benton.

Forty-four teams will strive for supremacy of the Public School Baseball League and the Post-Dispatch trophy this season. The Post-Dispatch trophy at present is held by the Benton School, the latter having won it last year by defeating Shaw in a weird contest in the finals. It must be won three times before it becomes the permanent property of a school. The campaign this year starts on April 22.

The number of entries this season is four less than in 1915. Several schools withdrew because many of their stars were lost through graduations. There also are several newcomers in the race for the championship this year.

Benton and Shaw, the two finalists last year are again in the race. Shaw will play in Group B, while Benton is entered in Group G. There are seven groups with Group A having the greatest number of aggregations, eight.

Shaw and Benton Enter.

The championship series this year will be run in the same manner as it was in 1915. The teams in the different groups play one game with the other and then the winners meet in an elimination series. All the contests must be played between 9 and 12 o'clock on Saturday mornings. If any of the contestants wish to stage seven inning battles after school hours arrangements to that effect can be made.

A baseball committee composed of principals to supervise the different groups is made up of the following: George L. Hawkins, Group A; F. M. Underwood, Group B; L. J. Sexton, Group C; Paul M. Miller, Group D; George R. Johnson, Group E; Charles E. Witter, Group F; W. W. Walters, Group G, and Rodowe Abeken, member at large.

The umpires for the season have not yet been named, but will be within the next few weeks.

The teams entered and the parks where the games will be played are as follows:

Group A—Blow, Carondelet, Clifton Heights, Froebel, Gardenville, Garfield, Shenandoah and Oak Hill. Carondelet Park grounds Nos. 1 and 2 and either Mannion's or Motordrome.
Group B—Fanning, Fremont, Grant, Mann, Shaw and Sigel. Tower Grove Park grounds Nos. 1, 2 and 3.
Group C—Hodgen, Madison, Marquette, Penrose, Roe and Wyman. High school campus and grounds 10 and 11 Forest Park.
Group D—Clark, Dozier, Emerson, Hempstead, Laclede and Washington. Forest Park 1, 2 and 6 during week days.
Group E—Divoll, Columbia, Crow, Jackson, Marshall and Riddick. Forest Park 1, 2 and 6 on Saturdays.
Group F—Ames, Blair, Bryan Hill, Harrison, Irving and Webster. Fairground 2, 3 and 4.
Group G—Ashland, Arlington, Benton, Cote Brilliante, Harney Heights and Lowell. O'Fallon Park 2, 3 and 4.

MORAN WILL FIND WILLARD'S JAW IS VERY HARD TO HIT

Blows to the Body Reach Him, but Fail to Make Any Impression.

HAS BEAR-LIKE DEFENSE

Blocks With His "Paws" and Leans Far Back Out of the Enemy's Range.

By Robert Edgren.

NEW YORK, March 18.—Frank Moran speaks confidently of his ability to knock out Jess Willard. But Frank will find the champion the hardest man in the world to stop. Johnson hit him many a furious blow in Havana and never drove him back a foot or caused him to show any sign of even momentary distress.

Willard has a natural defense—an instinctive defense like that of a bear. I've often heard it said by hunters that it would be impossible to hit a bear with a thrown hatchet. The bear would slap the missile aside. A bear is a natural boxer. He guards against blaws and does practically all of his fighting with his fore paws. Perhaps Willard, brought up in a wild game country, learned the first rudiments of boxing while playing with some cub bear. I know that boxing with a cub bear and studying its slapping tricks was a favorite amusement of Jim Jeffries one time. And Bob Fitzsimmons told me years ago that he learned the best part of his boxing stunts by watching tigers, lions and cats.

Like a bear Willard stands straight when attacked, and leaning back to pull his head away from blows either slaps them aside or catches them in his crossed forearms. He guards his head better than his body. Possibly that is because he has a great deal of confidence in his body to withstand body punches and body punches cause no visible damage.

Guards His Head Best.

The champion's great height makes it easy for him to lean back and avoid any jabs or swings. In the Havana fight with Johnson he completely puzzled the black champion before the first round was over. Johnson started with the idea he'd hit Willard whenever he wanted to. He found that the shoe was on the other foot. Willard could hit him, but he couldn't hit Willard except in the body.

When he jabbed at Willard's chin the big fellow leaned back a foot and let the jab fall short. When he tried to stand off and hold Willard away with an extended left arm, Willard reached over it and jabbed Johnson's mouth or eyes. Willard's tremendous reach, aided by his height, enabled him to hit the man whose blocking and countering had made him champion of the world. Willard could hit Johnson and pull back from his counters, making him flounder helplessly.

It is a dangerous thing to force the fight against a good counter-hitter. Many other fighters found that out while fighting Johnson. But Willard is a better counter-hitter than the black champion. He's a more dangerous man, while countering, than Johnson ever was. When Jess is struck hard and hurt he shoots a punch back instantly. And it is the punch of an irritated giant whose strongest instinct is to take revenge for an injury.

In Havana Jim Savage said to me just before the fight:

"If Johnson boxes and stalls along the fight may go the limit. But if he ever hurts Jess and makes him mad—Good night Johnson! Jess will knock him out sure."

Willard Hard Man to Beat.

That natural come-back of Willard's makes him a very hard man to beat. When a fighter lands heavily and "gets his mad going" he usually presses the advantage as hard as he can. Moran is particularly good at finishing a fighter who has been momentarily dazed or weakened by a blow. If he lands a good hard one, and lands it right, he's likely to sail in tooth and nail for a knockout. And right there he'll find Willard ten times as dangerous as he is when unhurt. Willard has remarkable shock assimilating powers. In all of his fights—and he has been hit many a good clout on chin and ribs—he's never shown the slightest sign of being weakened or dazed.

Just when one might expect to find him giving ground he is most dangerous. Soldier Kearns caught Willard in the solar plexus. It was as good a punch as landed on Corbett at Carson. Willard hurled himself bodily forward and struck Kearns a right hand smash on the jaw, knocking him down so hard his heels flew up in the air and he struck the floor on his shoulder blades, to be counted out. Kearns, who had been coming along like a champion had a "glass jaw" after that punch.

McCarthy, fresh from whipping Al Palzer in Los Angeles, came to New York. Willard was put up against McCarthy as a "set up." The idea was that Willard was big enough to look good in the ring with Luther and Luther could exhibit his wares to an admiring New York crowd. Luther exhibited his wares all right. He swarmed all over Willard and battered the big lanky novice around the ring for a round. Then Willard became peevish. He uppercut Luther so hard that he knocked chips out of the row of perfectly good teeth. McCarthy showed pride and gameness that night and pride and gameness saved him from being knocked out.

McCarthy Tried and Failed.

Twice in the Havana fight Johnson caught Willard with blows that looked as if they'd knock him out. Each time I expected to see the giant reel back, or even fall. Each time Willard, without giving away an inch, ripped his right hand back into Johnson's ribs. The blows hurt Johnson. They discouraged him. After the second incident he was clinched with Jess just above me where I sat at the ringside. Johnson looked down at me and lifting his right hand motioned as if to drive it into Willard's rib in the clinch, dropped it again without hitting and shook his head. It seemed as if he intended to say: 'What's the use. I can't hurt this guy and I'm only tiring myself hitting him.'"

There are three very discouraging things about fighting Jess Willard. He's so big that he can pull away from a punch and leave you shooting at empty air. If he is hit he doesn't seem to feel it or to lose any of his speed. If hit hard he always whips back a punch to even the score.

As a counter hitter Jess shines. I remember one afternoon when he was boxing with Jim Savage in Havana. Savage was waiting for a chance to drive a right into Willard's ribs. Willard left an opening purposely. Jim made a headlong plunge and drove the right in as hard as he could. But the blow never reached the mark. Willard's well educated left hooked suddenly in and caught Jim on the side of the head. Savage's right swished through the air, hitting nothing. He whirled around and plunged headlong through the ropes. And the jarring counters that stopped him nearly dislocated his right shoulder.

The World's Ring Champion and Three Reasons Why He Should Defeat Moran Next Saturday

JESS WILLARD AND FAMILY

Sullivan and Jeffries, in Their First Title Contests, Mere Novices Compared to Willard

Jess Fought 29 Times Before He Opposed Johnson

John L. Had but Eight Battles and Jeffries Only Ten When They First Fought for the Championship—and Won, Too.

By John E. Wray.

SOMEWHERE back in your noggin, Bo, lurks the idea that Jess Willard is a great, big sloth whom accident, not hard work and bitter gruelling in the ring, has shunted onto the world's champion's throne.

It is probably the prevailing belief, even among close followers of pugilism, that Jess is just a half-baked scrapper, whose gigantic bulk offsets any need of finesse and skill; that his work and preliminary fighting fall far short of that required to fit former title holders for world's championship honors.

But let's check a minute on this proposition. Old Man Dope, who is game if nothing else, tipped us off after exploring for three days among the guides and lore of the ring, that Willard has been pretty well-prepped in the school of experience to bear the laurels he wears.

Showing Up Some Heroes.

"DON'T think for a minute that the Corbetts, Fitzsimmons and Jeffries have worked harder than Our Gorgonzola friend Willard for the right to battle for the title," Dope commented, yesterday. "The famed John L. himself, according to the records, had fought less than 12 bouts when he won the title; Corbett had been in the ring a score of times before he defeated that incarnated vat, John L.; Fitzsimmons had fought a lot of battles, but Jeffries had appeared publicly only 19 times, when he altered the map of Lanky Bob, in their title match.

"Marvin Hart got the title easier than anyone. Marvin's record consisted largely of bouts with Old John Barleycorn whom he had put down so often that he lost count. But one day, at Reno, Nev., in 1905, Marvin put away a regular fighter, Jack Root, and thereupon James J. Jeffries transferred to him his crown—for a consideration of $1000 cash in hand.

Then came Tommy Burns.

"Burns was our first Cheese champion. He took part in a lot of battles of varied degrees of crookedness and honesty; but there were 38 of them before he got hold of Hart and inveigled him into a championship contest.

"Hart was fresh from a stomach punch handed him by Old King Alcohol. Burns, without difficulty, gained a decision over this animated distillery and so became a champion. He had fought 40 bouts before the title chance developed.

Johnson Had 'Em Scared.

"Johnson was a busy fighter. He would have been champion a lot sooner, but he was so dark the white champions just couldn't see him. Either that or they were practicing for an artists' profession, drawing the color line being their specialties.

"Thus, Johnson had battled 64 fights before he was given a real lookin for the championship.

"Of course he won it. Anybody could have disposed of a piece of cheese, at a mouthful. But Johnson really earned it. He had fought all the tough nuts and was the craftiest, cleverest and, in his prime, the very best heavyweight fighter of ALL time—up."

(This is Old Man Dope being interviewed, kindly remember, Bo.)

"Now we come to Willard, the 'sloth, lazy mammoth, unskilled dub,' etc., whom we have read about. But, as a matter of fact, this 'Dub' fought 29 battles before he was matched for the title.

"This is 21 fights more than Sullivan fought, when he was called up to high places; it was five more than Corbett, 19 more than Jeffries, and about as many as Fitz himself—including Australian contests—had battled, when asked to scrap for the world's laurels.

"Willard, on the score of experience, is therefore amply entitled to be world's champion and to defend his honors.

Composite Record of Champions

FOLLOWERS of pugilism will be surprised to note from this composite fight record of the former champions and Moran that Willard and his prospective opponent have founght much oftener and therefore should be better prepared by experience, for a championship appearance than were Sullivan, Corbett, Jeffries and even Fitzsimmons when they first tried for the title. Here are the figures, as compiled by Old Man Dope, showing the complete records to date:

	Rds.	Dec.	KO	W-F	L	K-by	L-F	N-D.	Exb	D	Years in Ring

Moran a Real Veteran.

"How about Frank Moran? Well, stay off of him, too, if you think he's green. In the six years Moran has been in the game he has battled 43 times against the best white men, and once against the best of the black dynasty.

"He has already fought more rounds than John L. Sullivan or Jim Jeffries did in their entire careers. Willard, too, in five years in the ring, has fought a greater number of rounds than did Jeffries in his lifetime.

"So, on the score of preparedness, there is no reason to knock our behemoth of a title-holder. The records show that he HAS been busy."

And, just to prove it, the Old Boy offers the following figures taken from the standard guides showing how many fights the champions fought each year of their ring careers:

About the Belfast Chicken.

"PROF." BILL CLARKE, long and favorably known in these parts as the Balfast Chicken—a game rooster he was, too—has passed on after 88 years filled to the brim with that wine of life, excitement, quaffed with unflagging gusto, to the end.

Bred as a boy, in an English "boxing booth," the "chicken" learned the game in a rough school—and liked it. Here was the system: The promoter of the "booth" assembled a bunch of fighters of all weights and with more or less experience in protecting themselves with their fists.

He led them from fair to fair, and race track to race track, pitching his tent where the crowd—and the crowns—were thickest. When everything was set and the ballyhoos had drawn a crowd, the promoter trotted out his boys and lined them up before the spectators.

He offered a sum of money to any in the crowd who could stand before one of the professionals a certain length of time; a still greater sum for the boy who could whip one of them.

How Bill Became Popular.

BILL was a bantamweight, when he started out. He was very popular with the crowd. Being LITTLE he was the choice of about nine-tenths of those eager to take a chance at winning the promoter's coin.

In this school Bill learned to protect himself. He HAD to, in order to wake up with the same face each day.

But although Bill became clever, he never climbed very high. You can search in vain in the "Ring Battles of Centuries" and other standard works and not find where Bill fought any of the good ones. Late in life he boxed Jem Mace and others in exhibitions.

Bill's reputation was built chiefly on his character, which was 99 44-100 optimism—this, and not pugilism, won him a place in the sun.

For the rest, he was the oldest living boxer, for all that the records tell us differently.

SIX VETERANS OF M'KINLEY'S TITLE NINE TO BE BACK

Last Season's "Prep" Champions Will Have Slight Edge in School League Race.

CENTRAL IS ALSO STRONG

Cleveland High School, With One Experienced Player, Is in Worst Shape.

Some 150 high school students answered the inaugural call for baseball candidates in the five local high schools last week. With the opening of the Interscholastic League season but one month away, the regular workouts of the diamond squad will be started this week.

Advance indications are that the coming "prep" season will result in a three-corned struggle between McKinley, Central and Soldan, with the Yeatman and Cleveland hopes resting entirely upon the capability of the recruits. Coach Midkiff will have the same herculean task in turning out a baseball winner at Cleveland as he had during the football and basketball seasons. Only one player of previous experience on a local scholastic nine has reported to him. This being Widdbread, an outfielder on the 1915 Central High team.

Yeatman has but two regulars and one substitute of last season's none too strong aggregation back for duty. Soldan is the most fortunate of the five schools, with nine of last year's players back in the fold. However, Central and McKinley with six veterans look better than Soldan, inasmuch as these two teams were far stronger than the West Enders, last season. McKinley won the "prep" championship last season by gaining a victory over Central in the final contest of the season. Had Coach Walker's tossers landed the game, the two teams would have been tied for the league leadership and a post-season contest necessary.

Six Veterans at McKinley.

Six of the strongest players of last season's nine reported to Coach Schiek at McKinley last Thursday. With Capt. Feuerborn back on first base, the clever Angelo Regna at short, Conly, last season's third baseman, Fries in the outfield, and pitchers Wallace and Menze, the South Siders have a nifty little squad for a nucleus. It is reported that Conly will be switched from the far corner to fill the vacancy left by Catcher Coates, while Wallace and Menze, while not pitching, will alternate in the outfield. De Voto, a new recruit is acclaimed as a phenom and is slated to nicely round out the infield by taking over second base, which was covered by Turnbull last season.

The four heaviest hitters of last season's Central High team are back on duty, all of which indicates that batting strength will be the chief attribute of the mid-city nine. Schleicher and John McElwee, both faraway hitters, and Capt. Larmore and Jones, timely batsmen, should serve well for Coach Walker's offense.

Schleicher is certain to retain his catching mitt and mask. Rosinsky is groomed for the first basing job. Widdicomb is the veteran second sacker. Jones will hardly be pressed for the short position, and Larmore will round out a compact inner defense. John McElwee is the sole survivor of the 1915 outfield and it is upon the new crop of gardeners and pitchers that Central's hopes depend. Not one twirler is back to play. Tracy, a recruit, is the most favored moundsman.

Three Vacancies at Soldan.

Second base, one outfield position and behind the bat are the only places where vacancies occur in the Soldan squad. The present personnel of the nine is: McQuoid, Harrison and Brockmeyer, pitchers; Duckworth, first base; Leschen, short; Williamson, third base; Olin and Savage, outfielders. Harrison will probably be groomed for the outfield vacancy, in as much as Graham, who pitched on the Manual T. S. team last season, will be annexed to the twirling corps.

Capt. and First Baseman Shanley, Third Baseman Fagan and Von Lehnsen, substitute outfielder, are the only members of the 1915 squad who have reported to Coach Crippen. McSkimming, an outfielder of the 1914 team, may report and aid a bit to bolster the squad, but at best, Yeatman's hopes are quite dismal. Whiddbread, an outfielder, makes up the Cleveland veteran squad, and although this youth is a clever player, Coach Midkiff's nine seems destined for the cellar berth.

Experts Disagree as to Ways in Which Title Could Change Hands in Coming Moran-Willard Battle

What Would Happen Should Champion Lose on a Foul, in a No-Decision Contest, Is Rock on Which Authoritative Opinion Splits.

CAN a title change hands when a champion meets an opponent in a ten-round, no-decision boxing contest? Is it possible for Moran to become champion of the world as a result of eventualities in his coming fight at New York, under the conditions outlined above? If so, in what way or ways can he do it?

These questions are agitating the minds of followers of boxing, to judge by questions put to the sporting department of the Post-Dispatch almost daily.

After burning the midnight kilowatt hour freely, Old Man Dope arrived at the conclusion that the title COULD pass, technically, in the following ways:

Knockout of Willard by Moran.

Stopping of the bout by the referee, because of Willard's inability to continue.

Stopping of the contest by the referee to save Willard unnecessary punishment.

Quitting, on the part of Willard.

Disqualification of the champion by the referee for fouling Moran.

Disagree on One Point.

ALL of the above methods are agreed to, with one exception—loss of title for fouling. A hopeless division on this point was revealed when Old Man Dope wired to several referees and boxing authorities for their views.

These are herewith presented:

By ED SMITH.

Referee of Johnson-Flynn Championship Fight and Many Other Bouts of Note.

CHICAGO, March 18.—The only way in which a champion can lose his title in a limited round no-decision contest is to receive a knockout punch and be actually counted out by the referee. And even in that case he loses his title only if his opponent is a man capable of making the weight limit of that particular division.

Since "no-decision" means exactly what it says, in cases where the law has granted the public the right to witness legal contests of that nature, wherein is a referee empowered to give a decision in case of a foul? He cannot even in a case of a knockout; he merely counts the man out and lets it go at that. He is not even empowered to declare a winner then, the winner coming automatically.

In case of a foul, the referee stops the contest, that's all, and does not declare a winner or a loser.

No authority is necessary to arrive at this conclusion or is precedent essential, though we have a glaring one in the Williams-Ertle contest not so long back in St. Paul. Common sense and a little analysis of the case are all that is needed.

ED W. SMITH,
Sporting Editor Chicago American.

CHARLEY WHITE.

Veteran New York Referee, Who Has Been Third Man in Several Title Contests.

NEW YORK, March 18.—Charley White, who has been named referee for the Willard-Moran contest, positively refuses to be quoted on anything bearing directly on the big bout. A hypothetical question as to the status of a champion after disqualification for foul, in any no-decision contest, elicited the reply that the title would unquestionably pass to the offended fighter. He cited the Ertle-Williams case and said Ertle was properly the champion.

By JACK SKELLY.

Former Lightweight Championship Contender, Suggested as Third Man for Big Bout.

YONKERS, N. Y., March 18.—If a champion boxer, at proper weight, commits a foul in a short or long contest, and is disqualified by the referee, he loses his title, in my opinion. There is no recognized precedent for this, decisionless bouts, which are usually jokes, having been recently introduced. JACK SKELLY.

By TOM ANDREWS.

"Dean of U. S. Boxing," Author of "Ring Battles of Centuries," and Publisher of a Standard Boxing Guide.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., March 18.—"In my opinion a champion should NOT lose his title in a no-decision contest, even if disqualified by the referee.

Under decisionless laws, no verdicts are possible as to winning a bout; and the same should apply as to fouls.

There is no precedent that I know of, to follow in such matters. Johnny Ertle tried to claim the bantam title from Kid Williams on an alleged foul, but his claim has never been generally recognized.

By HARRY STOUT.

Official Referee for Wisconsin State Boxing Commission.

MILWAUKEE, March 18.—No champion can lose his title in a limited, no-decision contest on a foul. The only way he can lose his title is by being knocked out. For, in a no-decisinon contest, a referee cannot render a decision.

HARRY STOUT.

Seconds Can't "Throw" Fight.

IT has also been suggested that the champion might lose in case one of his seconds committed a foul by jumping into the ring; but this would be palpably unfair. For example, it is conceivable that the opposition might bribe one of the title-holders' seconds to foul him and throw the fight, if championships passed in that manner.

It seems pretty safe to conclude, despite the difference of authorities on the foul point, that the PUBLIC will not recognize Moran, except on a knockout or its equivalent; and only in case he is WINNING at the time of a foul should one be committed by the champion.

Pacific Coast Basket Team Coming for Games With St. Louis Quints

Announceemnt was made yesterday that the Oakland Y. M. C. A basket ball team of Oakland, Cal., would pay a two-day visit here, Tuesday and Wednesday, on its return trip from Chicago, where it competed in the A. A. U. basket ball tournament. The Oaklands will meet the Missouri A. A. quint on Tuesday and will play the Columbian A. C. passers on Wednesday. Both games will be played on the C. A. C. court.

The coast tossers were runners-up in the 1915 tournament, being defeated by the Illinois A. C. quint in the finals. In the recent games they were eliminated in the semi-final round by the Illinois A. C. team, which was defeated by the Utah University team last night for the A. A. U. supremacy. Before meeting with defeat the Oaklands eliminated the Chicago First Regiment Armory, Ripon College and the Olympic A. C. team of Los Angeles.

Eight players are on the squad.

Merstetter After Place.

FULTON, Mo., March 18.—Francis E. Fisher of St. Louis, who will coach and manage the Westminster College baseball team this spring, got one practice day this week. In response to Fisher's call for candidates, 25 students reported to him. Syl Merstetter, the former St. Louis Central High team, was added to the squad this week and will try for an infield position. It brings the St. Louis delegation on the team to five members.

MUNICIPAL TEAMS PLAY SEMI-FINAL CONTESTS TODAY

Teresas Meet M. A. A., While C. B. C. Eleven Tackles Ellermans at C. B. C.

The semi-finals for the municipal soccer championships will be played this afternoon at the Christian Brothers' College campus. In the opening game the St. Teresas battle the Missouri A. A. team, while the second will be between C. B. C. and the Ellermans. In an effort to raise money with which to buy prizes an admission fee of 25 cents will be charged. The grounds are being donated by C. B. C.

The Teresas and Cherry Diamond teams get into the semi-final today because they drew an open date last Sunday, when the first elimination contests were staged. C. B. C. and the Ellermans, though, had to play for the right.

Last week the purple and gold team handed the Yawitz team, winner of the Forest Park division title, a 2—0 drubbing, and on the latter's home grounds. The Ellermans sprang a surprise by gaining a 2—0 victory over the Spanish Club at Fairground. C. B. C. won the championship last season and stands more than even chance of again landing.

C. B. C. Favored to Win.

The Easton avenue kickers have it on their opponents because they are able to practice every day. What's more, they're going faster in the second half than when the game starts. This is what makes them favorites in the pennant dash.

The Teresas had easy sailing in Group No. 1 at Fairground, getting little opposition. It was different with the M. A. A. The Cherry Diamond eleven had to fight it out with the Ruhrs and Bob Whites down to the last game.

Oliver Miller will referee the first game today, while Frank Healy will work in the second. The opening clash starts at 1:40 o'clock. The C. B. C. band of 30 pieces will be on hand.

The lineups:

Nee to Manage Dayton.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., March 18.—Johnny Nee, a brother of Dan M. Nee, coach of the Drury Panthers, and Tom Nee of the Springfield Independents and one of Springfield's contributions to the national organized sport, has been secured to manage the Dayton team of the Central League and is getting his players together for the coming season. He will begin training them the latter part of March. The task of managing the Vets will not be a new undertaking for the former Springfield boy, as he had the job in 1913 and 1914.

FIGHT ON MAJOR'S BOOM TO FEATURE PARTY GATHERING

Delegates From Eastern Part of State to Go to St. Joseph Today.

Delegates and candidates for State offices from the eastern half of the State will start for St. Joseph today to attend the Democratic State Convention Tuesday.

The prospect of a real fight over the proposition to indorse Gov. Major as a candidate for vice president, and the election of a Democratic national committeeman to succeed Edward F. Goltra, will attract many politicians to St. Josepr, in addition to the 1356 delegates.

The purpose for which the convention is called is to elect four delegates-at-large to the Democratic National Convention in St. Louis June 14, and 32 district delegates; nominate 18 presidential electors, and select a national committeeman.

It it a foregone conclusion that the convention will adopt resolutions strongly and unequivocally indorsing President Wilson for renomination, and will instruct the 36 delegates to vote for him.

Fight on Major.

The proposition to indorse Gov. Major for vice president is believed to be nothing more than a scheme to side-track him as a senatorial candidate, so that Senator Reed will have a clear field for renomination.

Allegations of Gov. Major's manipulation of the Excise Commissioner's offices in St. Louis and St. Louis County; of the Police Board in Kansas City, which is also an Excise Board, and of the Police and State Hospital Boards in St. Joseph, for his own political advantage, have starter a bitter fight upon the plan to vote an indorsement of him for Vice President.

The general weakness of the Major administration, and the belief on the part of many political leaders that it would be an imposition upon the Democracy of the country to send him out as a candidate for Vice President with Missouri's indorsement, may be sufficient to defeat the scheme. Many of the leaders are convinced that if, by any chance, he should win the nomination for the vicepresidency, it would cost President Wilson the State in November, because there is no way by which a voter can differentiate between the candidate for President and Vice President. He casts his ballot merely for the presidential electors of his party, who are pledged to vote in the electoral college for the party candidate for President and Vice President. In order to vote against Major the voter also would have to vote against Wilson.

The proof of the insincerity of the Major-for-vice-president scheme is shown by its backers in St. Louis. The meeting at which plans were made to slip an indorsement of Major through the Democratic State Committee and the Democratic Editorial Association on March 25, was called by Harry B. Hawes, who has been the most rabid anti-Major partisan in St. Louis, and was held in his room at the Planters Hotel. Hawes was St. Louis campaign manager for William S. Cowherd of Kansas City in the governorship contest in 1912, and succeeded in lining up the Democratic City Committee almost to a man against Major. These committeemen are now ostensibly for Major for Vice President, though at heart they are bitterly against him.

It was at the same meeting in Hawes' room that the plan to elect Rorace S. Rumsey, Excise Commissioner of St. Louis, under appointment from Major, Democratic national committeeman to succeed Goltra had its inception.

Dissatisfaction With Goltra.

There has been more or less dissatisfaction with Goltra as Democratic national committeeman among the working party leaders. They felt that he did not render efficient service at the meeting of the Democratic National Committee at Washington in December, when St. Louis won the Democratic National convention. They declare that it was more through the efforts of the Business Men's League Committee than to any efforts of Goltra that St. Louis won the convention.

After all objections to Major's indorsement had been iron out at the Hawes meeting, Rumsey suggested that as he would become the campaign manager for Gov. Major, he would like to be elected Democratic national committeeman, believing that thereby he could make the campaign more effective. He said he wished to serve only from the date of the State convention until after the national convention.

In addition to Hawes and Rumsey, those attending the meeting at which the Rumsey campaign was launched were Lon Sanders, Fountain Rothwell, United States Colector of Customs; Arthur Oliver, United States District Attorney; F. M. Kleiber, George H. Moore, United States Internal Revenue Collector, and Frank M. Sosey, United States Appraiser.

The presence of so many Federal officeholders at the conference lent color to the reports started immediately thereafter that Senators Stone and Reed were back of the Rumsey campaign for Governor. The Federal job holders all owe their appointments to the two Senators, and it was generally supposed that they were representing the wishes of Stone and Reed.

Friends of the Senator say that neither Stone nor Reed had anything whatever to do with bringing Rumsey out as a candidate for National Committeeman, and they are not supporting him in his fight against Goltra.

It is not improbable that the fight between Goltra and Rumsey will become so bitter that a compromise candidate will be agreed upon.

P. S. MARQUIS SUED FOR DIVORCE

Wife Charges He Took Other Women to Cafes.

Mrs. Bernardine P. Marquis of 5646 Kingsbury boulevard, yesterday filed suit to divorce Porter Sawyer Marquis, president of the St. Louis Roofing Co. They were married June 8, 1910, and separated Jan. 15, last.

The petition sets forth that Marquis remained out late, beginning last year; that he took other women to cafes and that he was rude to the plaintiff's mother and brother when they were visiting at the Marquis home last November. It also is alleged that the husband failed to keep an appointment to meet his wife in Kansas City.

They have two children, Bernardine Jacqueline, 20 months old, and Patricia, one month old, for whose custody the mother asks. She also seeks alimony.

ENTRY OF GARDNER HURTS CHANCES OF JOHN E. SWANGER

Republicans Were for Sedalian as Long as State House Crowd Had Chance.

Coincident with the formal announcement yesterday of John E. Swanger of Sedalia as a Republican candidate for Governor, the faction of the St. Louis Republican City Committee, which has been fostering the Swanger boom for a month, concluded it would become necessary to drop him as a candidate for some other man who would make a stronger appeal to the St. Louis voters.

The entry of Fred D. Gardner of St. Louis into the race as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor is largely responsible for the decision of the Republicans to drop Swanger. As long as it appeared to the Republican leaders that either Secretary of State Roach, Attorney-General Barker, John M. Atkinson, Lieutenant-Governor Painter, or any one else connected with the Major administration, had a chance for the Democratic nomination, they were willing to go into the fight next November with Swanger as their candidate.

But as soon as it seemingly became apparent to them that Gardner had jumped into the lead in the Democratic race, the faction became convinced that Swanger would not have a chance for election in November it Gardner should be the Democratic nominee.

John Schmoll, Republican City Chairman, and former Judge Selden P. Spencer, both have been suggested as candidates for Governor during the past few days. Schmoll really would like to make the race for Governor, but he has told his friends that he did not wish to go against Gardner as a candidate. The Republicans figure that Gardner can not only poll the full Democratic strength, but that he will draw the vote of many business men, and make a strong appeal to the independent voter.

While the Kiel-Schmoll-Graves faction of the city organization is shifting from one candidate to another, the Koeln faction is standing firm on former Judge Henry Lamm of Sedalia. The members of the committee who are supporting Judge Lamm are confident that the other faction will eventually have to come to him because, they say, he is the only candidate with whom they could expect to win in a contest against Gardner.

The indorsement of Judge Lamm by the St. Louis County Republicans was also a blow to Swanger's candidacy.

The party leaders will hold caucuses during the Republican State convention at Excelsior Springs April 6 to try to reach some agreement upon a gubernatorial candidate. All previous conferences on this subject have been without result. There are now four Republican candidates in the field—Judge Lamm, Swanger, Charles D. Morris of St. Joseph, and Hugh McIndoe of Joplin. E. E. E. McJimsey of Springfield is also in the background as a candidate, and may get into the race at any time after the Excelsior Springs convention.

SOMMERS FURNITURE CO. TO RETIRE FROM BUSINESS

The D. Sommers Furniture Co., for 30 years one of St. Louis' large furniture houses, announced Saturday that the firm would give up their lease on their building at Eleventh and Olive streets shortly and retire from business.

The announcement of the company's retirement was made by Frederick W. Arnold, vice president of the firm. He declared the dissolution was agreed upon in order to allow David Sommers the president of the company, to take up active work with the Schram Glass Mfg. Co., in which he is interested Arnold stated that he was retiring on account of his health.

This marks the passing of one of St Louis' oldest and largest furniture houses. For 30 years D. Sommers has been in business here. In that time, according to Arnold, the company has served 45,000 customers, doing a total business of $10,000,000, and had furnished many homes of St. Louis.

Arnold said that it was the company's intention to sell out the complete stock on hand, which amounts to nearly $100,000, to individual buyers in a large price-reducing sale to begin Monday. The sale is to continue until the expiration of their lease.

Arnold also said that they felt the company owed it to their patrons to follow this plan of selling out in preference to disposing of the stock in blocks to the large store buyers. He further stated that all the fixtures, as well as the complete stock of furniture and musical instruments, would be sold in this low-price sale. No application to leave the location had been made he stated.

NEW YORK LAWYER KILLED BY WIFE IN MARYLAND HOME

Arthur English, Former Government Attorney, was Son of Author of "Ben Bolt."

FREDERICK, Md., March 18.—Mrs. Eloise Young English shot and killed her husband, Arthur E. English, a lawyer of New York, at their home near here today. The shooting was done in the presence of their 6-year-old daughter, and is said to have occurred during a quarrel. English was a son of Thomas Dunn English, a former Congressman from New Jersey, and the author of the song "Ben Bolt."

Mrs. English claimed that she shot in self-defense when her husband, in a fit of anger, pointed a revolver at her. An examination of the body of English showed that a bullet had gone through the heart and that four other bullets had taken effect.

Mrs. English was exonerated by a coroner's jury here tonight after she and three of her children had testified to English's alleged brutality and frequent threats to kill his wife.

The woman testified that while their two sons were cutting wood this morning, she requested her husband to permit the elder boy to quit on account of illness. She said this angered her husband, who began to smash dishes and furniture. Mrs. English obtained a revolver, hid it in her dress and later when her husband took his revolver and threatened to kill her, she testified, she emptied the five chambers of her revolver into his body.

Mrs. English is a daughter of the late McClintock Young, a Frederick inventor. She was one of the most attractive members of the younger social set of Frederick at the time of her marriage to English, 16 years ago.

English was the author of a book of legal phrases, which is considered a creditable work. He was about 53 years old.

English Formerly an Assistant United States Attorney.

NEW YORK, March 18.—Arthur English was assistant United States Attorney in the Department of the Interior from 1893 to 1897, when he resigned and resumed private practice in this city. He was one of the commissioners of the Hudson-Fulton celebration in 1909. The present Mrs. English, whom he married in 1900, was his second wife, his first having died five years before. He had one son by his first marriage and three children, two sons and a daughter, by his second.

English was born in this city in 1863 and was a graduate of New York University. He studied Hindoo, Greek, Roman, Hebrew and American law under private tutors. He also was a student of medicine and science.

Had Suffered the Agony of a Dozen Deaths

Prominent Farmer in Canada Describes His Recovery and Escape from the Operating Table.

In a letter to friends at Saskatoon, Mr. F. Gifford, of the Ball Rock Farm, Maymont, Saskatchewan, Canada, says: "Thanks to Fruitola and Traxo I am alive. I lay on my back for sixteen days, suffering the agonies of a dozen deaths. I began taking Fruitola and was relieved of a great many gall-stones. My health is now fully restored."

Fruitola is a powerful lubricant for the intestinal organs and one dose is usually sufficient to give ample evidence of its efficacy. It is a great system cleanser. Following a dose of Fruitola, Traxo should be taken three or four times a day in order to rebuild and restore the system that has been weakened and run down by constant suffering. It is a splendid tonic, acting on the liver and stomach most beneficially.

Fruitola and Traxo are prepared in the Pinus laboratories at Monticello, Ill., and arrangements have been made to supply them through representative druggists. In St. Louis they can be obtained at Wolff-Wilson Drug Co., 6th St. and Washington Av.

CHESTNUT STREET BUILDING LEASED FOR SHOE FACTORY

Alterations Costing $12,000 Being Made in Building at 22d Street for Newly Incorporated Concern Which Will Manufacture Highest Grade of Women's Shoes.

BANK PROPERTY BOUGHT BY PICKEL

Schapers Stores Co. Takes Long Lease on Five-Story Structure at Northeast Corner of Washington Avenue and Sixth Street—Realty Market Active.

Developments of the past week disclosed notable improvement in the ealty situation in St. Louis, especialy in the business district. The distinct feature was the closing of a lease esterday by the recently incorporated ohnson, Stephens & Shinkle Shoe Co. of he four-story and basement building t the northwest corner of Twenty-Second and Chestnut streets, owned by he Woodmar Realty Co.

The lease is noteworthy as reflecting he growth of St. Louis as a shoe center. The firm is composed of Andrew W. ohnson, Howard V. Stephens of the honson-Stephens Leather Co., Bradford hinkle and Charles P. Spalsbury. The ompany will employ about 400 artisans nd manufacture the highest grade of omen's shoes.

The building leased comprises about 5,000 square feet, while the plant ill have a capacity of 2500 pairs of hoes a day.

Conrad L. Schopp and the Martin-reitt Real Estate Co., representing he lessor and the lessee, effected this ease. WOMAN, AS "NEXT FRIEND," AIDS MINOR DAUGHTER TO SUE HER Judgment for Damages for Father's Death in Auto Accident Necessary to Collect Insurance.

Elizabeth E. Mellon 15 years old, yesterday filed suit against her mother, Mrs. Edith A. Mellon, a daughter of John F. Storm of 3506 Pine street, for $10,000 damages on account of the death of her father, George A. Mellon, who died Sept. 9 as a result of an automobile accident three months before.

Mellon was riding in an automobile that was owned and driven by his wife. The petition sets forth that Mrs. Mellon failed to observe the State law and city ordinance to keep a vigilant watch for obstructions, turns in the road and danger, and as a result of her negligence in this respect, her automobile turned off a road over which she was driving and ran into a tree. Her husband's back was broken.

Although Mrs. Mellon is named as defendant, she enables her daughter, who is a minor, to bring the suit by acting as her "next friend" and curatrix.

The attorney, Sidney Thorne Able, explained to reporters that Mrs. Mellon carried automobile liability insurance upon her machine and that it would be necessary to get judgment against her to enforce payment from the insurance company in a claim for damages.

3 OF 10 HOUSES IN SHAW PLACE HAVE BEEN SOLD

Occupants Purchase Places in Which They Have Lived Several Years.

The Matthews Real Estate Co. announces the sale of three of 10 houses in Shaw place, with negotiations pending for the remaining seven. The purchasers are Homer Basford, Robert E. Mepham and an attorney whose name is withheld. The price paid in each instance was $6500. These houses are on lots from Shaw avenue to De Tonty street, five on each side of an oval and driveway.

The purchasers, who have occupied the house for several years, have elaborate plans for modernizing them, the introduction of steam heating plants and larger front porches being contemplated.

The houses were erected by Henry Shaw, the addition being formerly a part of Shaw's Lafayette addition. It was originally the intention of the Welfare Realty Co., comprised of George T. Burdeau and George W. Davis, and which recently acquired the Shaw place property through the Matthews company, to raze the houses and erect in their places 20 apartment houses, but the advance in the cost of building material caused the owners to forego the building plans.

The area of Shaw place is 883x170 feet, each lot being 80x175 feet. Matthews stated that the little subdivision would be restricted as a high-class residential park. The location is just west of Grand avenue.

The houses are grouped about a park of trees and shrubbery, set out by Mr. Shaw, whose estate originally embraced a large slice of this part of the city, including Tower Grove Park.

The McPherson Development Co., of which Robert Burns is president, has begun the erection on the north side of Lewis Park, west of Taylor avenue, of 13 bungalows, to cost in the aggregate $52,000. Each bungalow will have five rooms, bath and reception hall.

The company is a subsidiary of the Busch-Burns Realty Co., which has purchased a frontage of 350 feet in Lewis place, all of which will be improved with buildings of this description.

J. H. Farish & Co. has started construction of six bungalows on the west side of Yale avenue, between Oakland and Wise avenues. The buildings will comprise six and seven rooms, including porches and large living room, and will be built with hollow tile and stucco.

Yale avenue is two blocks west of McCausland avenue, and the Clayton entrance to Forest Park.

All the improvements are made in this section, including streets, sewers, electric light and gas mains.

SCHOOL A FEATURE IN UNION ELECTRIC 5-STORY ADDITION

Company Announces That Top Floor Also Will Contain Kitchen and Dining Room.

DETAILS ARE GIVEN OUT

Bay Projection, Forming Tower at the Top, Will Be Crowned With Novel Lighting Device.

Plans have been completed for the enlargement of the Union Electric Light and Power Co.'s building at the southwest corner of Twelfth and Locust streets, from a five to a 10-story structure.

The Corner Realty Co., the owner of the building, has arranged with the Mercantile Trust Co. for a loan of $250,000 to defray the cost of the improvement, work on which will commence as soon as the theatrical season closes.

The addition will provide for the expansion of the Union Electric, which occupies all the building except the part reserved for the Shubert Theater.

Much Space for Employes' Benefit.

Much of the space on the floors to be added will be given over to the uses in various ways of the company's employes, while the remainder will be utilized for office purposes.

On the top floor a large class room and lecture hall will be installed, where subjects beneficial to employes will be taught and discussed. This floor will also have a kitchen and dining room for employes, where the noon lunch will be served.

Library, rest rooms, associations rooms and a savings department for employes will be provided for on other floors of the building.

The exterior of the structure will be finished in white enamel brick and white enamel terra cotta trimmings, with polychrome terra cotta used in the upper story and in the cornice. A balcony will be carried across the building on the Twelfth street and Locust street sides at the third floor level.

MANY CHANGES BEING MADE IN THE JACCARD BUILDING

New Tenants Moving in and Old Ones Are Enlarging Their Floor Space.

The owners of the Jaccard Building are making many new repairs, including a flooring of Tennessee marble in the vestibule. A large sum is to be expended in beautifying this structure. Many new tenants have recently procured offices in the building and old tenants have taken additional room, according to the McNair & Harris Realty Co., agent for the property. Among the latter are the Rosenbach company, which has taken nearly six times as much space as it had when it originally moved into the Jaccard Building.

The National China Co., which has been occupying three rooms, has added the one adjoining, as have also the American Chair Co. and the Western Enameling Co. and the Dunham Manufacturing Co. of New York, which has for many years maintained its only branch sales office here, has, in addition to the two offices occupied by it for the past 10 years, expanded its space 50 per cent.

The Flake Photo Supply Co. and A. W. Sanders, photographer, have approximately doubled their respective space, while several others are upon the point of enlarging quarters.

THE TOMBRIDGE AGENCY.

Acid Stomachs Are Dangerous

Common Sense Advice by a New York Physician.

"Acid" stomachs are dangerous because too much acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach, thus hindering and preventing the proper action of the stomach, and leading to probably nine-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble from which people suffer. Ordinary medicines and medicinal treatment acting only upon the stomach walls, or as an artificial digestant, are useless in such cases, for they leave the source of the trouble, the excess acid in the stomach, as dangerous as ever. The acid must be neutralized, and its excessive formation prevented, and there is nothing better for this purpose than a teaspoonful of plain bisurated magnesia, a simple antacid, taken in a little warm or cold water after eating, which not only neutralizes the acid, but also prevents the fermentation. Foods which ordinarily distress may be digested perfectly if the meal is followed with a little bisurated magnesia, which can be obtained from any druggist, and should always be kept handy.—ADV.

$420,000 WORTH OF LOTS WILL BE SOLD AT AUCTION

Remainder of North Parkview Addition Will Be Offered April 15.

OLD DELMAR RACE TRACK

It Is Not Restricted Against Apartment Buildings for Which It Is Adapted.

All the remaining unsold ground in North Parkview Addition, approximately $420,000 worth, will be closed out at auction, April 15, under management of John S. Harris.

This tract lies on the north side of Delmar avenue, just west of Skinker road, and is not restricted against apartment buildings, for which, incidentally, real estate men say it is especially attractive.

The property was known as the Delmar race track before it was subdivided, two or three years ago, at a cost of $200,000, including a sewer costing $100,000.

Sale to Make Division.

The sale has been devised, Harris says, to apportion the undivided interests of the members of the Delmar Improvement Co., the owner of the tract. Some of them live in New York City and at other remote points. Accordingly, the attempt to dispose of the property at private sale has proved impracticable, owing to the fact that it was necessary to submit each sale contract to the different members of the syndicate, all of whom had ideas of their own as to the value of the property.

Since he took charge of the proposition on Feb. 1, Harris has disposed of $80,000 worth of the lots in the tract, the purchasers having plans for large apartment buildings.

No Limit or Reserve.

The lots, Harris declares, are to be disposed of without limit or reserve, to the highest bidder, the owners having decided to make a clean sweep of the ground, regardless of prices. Thus it is believed the auction will offer an opportunity to purchase unrestricted building sites in a high-class locality at advantageous prices, and investors, as well as speculators, will do well, he says, to attend the sale.

The terms will be most attractive. All deeds of trust are to bear 5 per cent interest and will be payable on or before maturity. The south half of the property will be sold on term of one-fourth cash, the balance payable in one, two and three years. The north half will be sold on a small cash payment on every lot and balance payable monthly, which will make it most attractive to the small investor. As the lots have the average front footage about 35 feet, the prices have been ranging from $30 to $35 per foot.

Many Apartment Houses.

There are many apartment houses under construction and completed in North Parkview which will compare with the best in St. Louis, Harris declares. The flats there are different from any other in the city, because it is necessary in construction to use a hip roof on all buildings of two stories which are in the north half of the subdivision. Such restriction as this exists only in North Parkview, where the property is not restricted against apartments and flats.

North Parkview is completely improved with most modern sewer system that money could buy. The streets are all Telford and have granitoid gutters and wide granitoid sidewalks. Property is reached by the Delmar-Olive cars and is located on the north side of Delmar avense between Eastgate and Westgate avenues.

The Weisels-Gerhart Real Estate Co. reports the sale of the residence at 6316 Waterman avenue, Parkview, to William M. James, vice president of the Kroeger-Amos-James Grocer Co. This home is a very attractive one in Old English style, with large living room, reception hall, sleeping porch and billiard room.

The property was sold for the account of Mr. William R. Barnhart. Mr. and Mrs. James, who now reside on Berlin avenue, near Skinker road, will occupy the new home about April 15.

HOW TO REDUCE YOUR WEIGHT

A SIMPLE, SAFE, RELIABLE WAY

People who are over-burdened with superfluous fat know only too well the discomfort and ridicule that over-stout people have to bear.

If you are carrying around five or ten pounds of unhealthy fat you are unnecessarily weakening your vital organs and are carrying a burden which destroys the beauty of your figure.

There is no need of anyone suffering from superfluous fat. If you want to reduce your weight in a simple, safe and reliable way, without starvation diet or tiresome exercise here is a test worth trying: Spend as much time as you can in the open air, breathe deeply and get from Wolff-Wilson Drug Co. or any good druggist a box of oil of korein capsules; take one after each meal and one before retiring at night.

Weigh yourself once a week so as to know just how fast you are losing weight and don't leave off the treatment or even skip a single dose until you are down to normal.

Oil of korein is absolutely harmless, is pleasant to take, and helps digestion. Even a few days' treatment has been reported to show a noticeable reduction in weight, footsteps become lighter, your work seems easier and a lighter and more buoyant feeling takes possession of your whole being.

Every person who suffers from superfluous fat should give this treatment a trial.—ADV.

ENVER PASHA RETURNS TO CONSTANTINOPLE FROM SYRIA

Berlin Report Apparently Disposed of Rumor That Turkish War Minister Was Assassinated.

BERLIN, by wireless to Sayville, March 18.—Advices from Constantinople say that Enver Pasha, Turkish Minister of War, who has returned to that city after an inspection tour through Syria, Palestine and Arabia as far as Medina, expressed himself as well satisfied with his trip. He was received enthusiastically every where.

Enver Pasha found that great progress had been made recently, particularly in Syria and Palestine. According to these advices, the Turks and Arabs are in perfect harmony and reports of riots in Syria are without foundation.

The foregoing apparently disposes of the recent rumors that Enver Pasha had been assassinated and that a new Minister of War had been appointed.

BETTER THAN CALOMEL

Thousands Have Discovered Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets Are a Harmless Substitute.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—the substitute for calomel—are a mild but sure laxative, and their effect on the liver is almost instantaneous. They are the result of Dr. Edwards' determination not to treat liver and bowel complaints with calomel. His efforts to banish it brought out these little olive-colored tablets.

These pleasant little tablets do the good that calomel does, but have no bad after effects. They don't injure the teeth like strong liquids or calomel. They take hold of the trouble and quickly correct it. Why cure the liver at the expense of the teeth? Calomel sometimes plays havoc with the gums. So do strong liquids.

It is best not to take calomel, but to let Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets take its place.

Most headaches, "dullness" and that lazy feeling come from constipation and a disordered liver. Take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets when you feel "logy" and "heavy." Note how they "clear" clouded brain and how they "perk up" the spirits. At 10c and 25c per box. All druggists. The Olive Tablet Company, Columbus, O.

JUDGE HENNINGS TAKES NEW CIRCUIT COURT EQUITY BRANCH

Docket of That Division Six Months Behind, While Jury Department Has Too Little Work.

A new equity division of the Circuit Court was established by the Circuit Judges yesterday, and Judge Hennings, who has been sitting as a jury judge, will hear this class of cases, which also include divorce suits, beginning April 1.

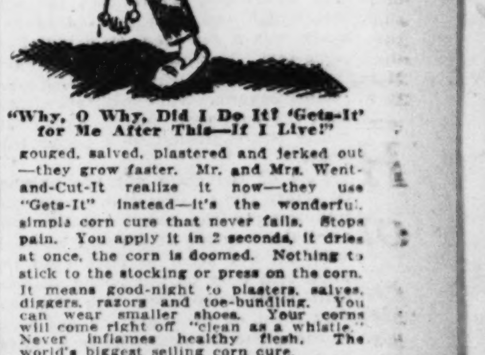
When the new rules went into effect last September two equity courts were provided for and there were eight jury divisions. However, it has been found that the dockets of the equity divisions, in which Judges Shields and Arnold presided, were crowded and not enough jury cases were listed by the lawyers to keep the jury branches busy. There are 1500 cases in the courts of Judges Shields and Arnold, and they are about six months behind in their dockets.

Presiding Judge Taylor, who sits in the assignment division, yesterday said if lawyers would take advantage of the new system to get a speedy determination of cases by listing them for trial, as the rules provide, there would be plenty of work for all the jury courts.

Mr. Went-And-Cut It —Here's Mr. 'Gets-It'

The New Plan Corn Cure That's as Sure as the Rising Sun.

"Glad to meat you!" says the razor to the corn. "I'll bleed for you!" says the corn to the razor. Razors and corns love each other. Corns love to be cut, picked,



"Why, O Why, Did I Do It? 'Gets-It' for Me After This—If I Live!"

gouged, salved, plastered and jerked out—they grow faster. Mr. and Mrs. Went-and-Cut-It realize it now—they use "Gets-It" instead—it's the wonderful, simple corn cure that never fails. Stops pain. You apply it in 2 seconds, it dries at once, the corn is doomed. Nothing to stick to the stocking or press on the corn. It means good-night to plasters, salves, diggers, razors and toe-bundling. IF EXCITED, WOULD BANANA LOOK LIKE A PISTOL TO YOU?

Washington University Class Test Shows Fallibility of Eye-Witnesses.

Lawyer for the Defense: Your Honor, I protest against permitting this man to testify. He is only an eyewitness.
Judge (to Prosecutor): Sir, what do you mean by taking up the court's time with the testimony of mere eyewitnesses?
Prosecutor: I beg Your Honor's pardon. If the Court will permit, I would like to introduce as witnesses a man living three blocks from the scene of the crime, who did not hear about it until the next day, and a deaf and dumb woman who hasn't been told about it yet.

The Eye-Witness, whose utterances have had great weight in courts, and who has sent many men to prison and some to the gallows, is an ignorant fraud, who half of the time doesn't know what he is talking about.

This is the conclusion reached by Prof. Edgar James Swift's class in psychology in Washington University, following the excitement caused in the classroom Friday afternoon by a fake murder, which the professor and four students staged, movie-fashion, without previous announcement.

The "idea" was to see whether the members of the class would know what they had seen, and whether they could tell a straight story about it afterward. According to Prof. Swift, the result was very unfavorable to the prestige of the Eye-Witness.

"Revolver" Was Banana.

The Eye Witness, in fact, was conclusively convicted of not knowing a bright yellow banana from a revolver.

A class of 36, two-thirds of the number being young women, sat in the classroom, taking notes as Prof. Swift lectured on the unreliability of sudden impressions.

The door was opened, and two men, arguing and gesticulating angrily, burst into the room, followed by two young women. 'Give it back!" one of the men commanded, and the other replied, "I won't do it." The two young women screamed and expostulated as one of the men extended his hand, which held a smooth, gleaming object, and pointed it at the other. There was a report as of a pistol shot, and the second man fell upon a chair, then sprang up and followed the first man and the young women in a precipitate exit from the room. The whole scene took but a few seconds.

"Now," said Prof Swift to his class "write a concise account of what you have just seen."

Torpedoes for Shots.

The members of the class relized, by this time, that they had seen a bit of play-acting, though the realism of the scene had for an instant convinced some of them. But when they tried to describe the occurrance, there proved to be about as many different stories as there were eye-witnesses and none of them was startlingly correct.

Nearly every student, Prof. Swift said last night, wrote that the object which one man pointed at the other was a revolver, or a pistol of some sort. Not one of them, he said, recognized it for what it was—a ripe, yellow banana. None realized, either, that the supposed pistol shot was really the explosion of a paper torpedo.

Few of the class got the number of actors right. One said six persons had entered the room; another figured the number at 10; and another, who did not seem to have seen the men, told only of the young women. Still more surprising was the fact that most of the class did not seem to recognize the actors as their classmates, although no disguise or unusual garb was worn. One wrote that the "wounded" man had a fiery red face, and wore a handkerchief of the same color about his neck.

The actors, who had been rehearsed in advance by Prof. Swift, were Carl Kamp of 2826 North Twenty-First street, in the role of the assailant, Thomas Horn of 6117 Westminster place as the man shot, and Misses Senta Retter of 6037 Waterman avenue, and Theodora Thacher of 5185 Lindell boulevard.

ST. LOUIS WOMEN PROMISE AID FOR FRENCH WAR ORPHANS

Meeting at Home of Mrs. Jackson Johnson Attended by English Women Interested in Cause.

Twenty-five women met last night at the residence of Mrs. Jackson Johnson, 25 Portland place, to make plans for caring for French children made orphans by the war. The society that has this movement in charge is under the direction of the President of France. Miss Blanche Schofield and Miss Eleanor Fell of England, who are presenting the cause to American women, were at the meeting.

The original plan was to obtain subscriptions that would amount to 10 cents a day for each child, but this has not been observed strictly in the American societies. Mrs. William Bagnell is the treasurer of the St. Louis organization and subscriptions, payable to her, were made out at the meeting. The amount of the subscriptions was not announced.

The women making subscriptions were told that upon request they would be given the names of the children who received their money and details of the needs of the children.

DYER CONFIDENT ST. LOUIS CAN GET A TRAINING CAMP

Congressman Enlists Favor of Adjutant-General, Who Puts Question Up to Business Men's League.

By Wire From the Washington Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, March 18.—Representative Dyer of St. Louis thinks St. Louis can have a military training camp next summer on the lines of the Plattsburg camp, provided the business and professional men of the city want it.

If 500 St. Louisans will pledge their personal attendance, Dyer is confident they can get a training camp near that city, possibly at Arcadia, Mo. His opinion is that 1000 men should come forward with assurances that they will attend the camp. He thinks it should be easy to get this number if officers of the Business Men's League, other business organizations and the new patriotic and national defense organizations get together and push the movement along.

Dyer has held two conferences with Adjutant-General McCain, the second today.

"From what Gen. McCain said," said Dyer, "I have no doubt St. Louis can secure one of the 15 training camps which it is proposed to establish during the summer, provided the business and professional men are really interested.

"I sent a telegram to the Business Men's League today suggesting that books be opened and business and professional men invited to put down their names, thereby pledging attendance at the camp if one is established. In this way it could be quickly determined whether there is sufficient interest in St. Louis to warrant the War Department in taking up the matter with the commander of the Central Department at Chicago, who has recommended that camps be established at Fort Sheridan and Fort Benjamin Harrison only. The recommendations of the Department Commander, however, were based on the ground that it would be very difficult to secure a sufficient number of regular army officers and men for more than two camps in the Central Department.

A telegram which Dyer received from the Business Men's League indicates that the officers of the league had accepted as final the recommendations of the Department Commander and pledged support to make the proposed camps at Fort Sheridan and Fort Harrison a success. Dyer thinks it is not too late to work for a separate camp at St. Louis, provided the business men of the city get busy at once and begin by pledging their personal attendance.

NEGRESS CARRIES TO GRAVE SECRETS OF THE GUNNESS CASE

Shock and Burns Cause Death of Woman Who Owned Eight Houses and Large Bank Account.

LAPORTE, Ind., March 18.—Whatever secrets of the Gunness case she may have had were carried to the grave by Mrs. Elizabeth Smith, 75 years old, a negro woman, who died today from shock and burns received in a fire that partly destroyed her home Thursday. She left several thousand dollars in cash in a local bank, owned eight houses and drew a Federal pension of $24 a month.

When Ray Lamphere was arrested for setting fire to the Gunness house, April 28, 1908, it became known that he had spent the night at the home of the Smith woman, leaving at 3 o'clock in the morning. The fire was discovered shortly before 4 o'clock. The woman was a witness for Lamphere in an effort to prove he did not leave her house until too late to have fired the place, which resulted in the burning to death of Mrs. Gunness and three children and the discovery a few days later that Mrs. Gunness had murdered a dozen people and buried them on her farm.

Mrs. Boynton was ordered to appear in police court tomorrow on a charge of careless driving. She said an automobile in front of hers stopped suddenly and that as she turned out to go around the boy stepped in front of her machine.

NEWS AND FEATURES OF THE POULTRY WORLD

HOW BREEDERS CAN MEET DEMAND FOR LARGER EGGS

Proper Selection for Mating Coops Will Increase Size of Birds and Product.

By T. J. USSELMANN, St. Louis.

Much attention is being given in some quarters to breeding larger hens and larger eggs. Both are essential to meet the growing demand caused by the shortage of meat animals. Standard weights should not be reduced. On some of our breeds the weight should be increased. We have a good standard of perfection, and the closer we live up to it the better for both fancier and utility breeder. Changes of type and of color are, however, necessary from time to time.

I admit that for exclusive egg production, the Leghorns, or some of the smaller breeds are very profitable. They require less care and feed than some others and can be crowded into small space, but even the breeders of White Leghorns are working for larger eggs, and now there is a weight requirement for Leghorns in the new edition of the Standard of Perfection, and this, I am sure, is a move in the right direction. The weights now called for in the Standard for Leghorns are: Cocks, 5½ pounds; cockerels, 4½ pounds; hens, 4 pounds; pullets, 3½ pounds.

We are going to see a time when the small white eggs will be worth 2 or 3 cents less on the market than large ones. It is claimed by some poultry writers that the St. Louis and other markets demand white eggs. Personally, I have bought and sold more than 1,000,000 dozen eggs and my experience has been that the majority in this market prefer large, brown eggs, even if they have to pay more for them. No one claims, I believe, that one color of egg is better than the other. As a rule, of course, the dark eggs are larger because they come from larger fowls. In the Missouri State egg-laying contest for January four out of five of the highest pens were layers of brown eggs. The contest for the past several years also shows that no particular variety produced a larger number of eggs than others. The strain is of more value in this direction than the particular variety chosen.

The average weight of a dozen eggs in the United States is 23 ounces. This, I am convinced, is about 4 ounces lower than it should be. The average weight of a dozen eggs received in the market during the winter months is about 25 ounces, whereas a dozen eggs received in June and July fall far below the average. This accounts for the small size of storage eggs usually sold in January. Many of these eggs are laid in June and July, when eggs are cheap and when every little scrub, late or immature pullet is laying. She is making an effort to repay for the feed consumed during the rest of the year, but she seldom succeeds, as the price of eggs is very low during these months, and in these storage eggs the large brown ones are usually missing, because the fully developed hens and pullets that furnished eggs during the winter when they were high-priced are now likely to become broody and the valuable eggs have been disposed of to the market and consumed.

Too often the hen spends the summer months in hatching and raising chicks from eggs laid by scrubs, and as like begets like, her good qualities and efforts will be wasted. Line breeding and trap-nesting, of course, furnish a remedy, but years of time and study are required by both. I have studied line breeding for years and am convinced that it is the surest way to get results but unless you get a good chart and study it closely and follow it to the dot you will do better not to attempt it. The trap nest has done a great deal of good and it is useful in breeding for large eggs as well as for heavy egg production. Trap-nesting is particularly useful in handling pullets. Under this method those laying small eggs should be disposed of in the early summer. Those laying large eggs should be legbanded, a different color of band being used each season, so the age of a hen can be told without picking her up to look at the number.

In order to develop a laying strain, large, well-developed yearling hens, say two years old, should be used if possible. Bear in mind that in general the size and weight must be obtained from the female and the type and stamina usually comes from the male bird. We have found cases where scrubs have made a good record as compared with standard bred fowls. This very scrub, however, may have been the offspring of a hen which was not fed for egg production and had free range and plenty of vitality, but the offspring of this scrub may result in birds that are weaklings. We cannot force a pullet to lay 200 or more eggs a year and at the same time expect to raise strong and vigorous chicks from her. It is a mistake to feed for heavy egg production when the eggs are used for hatching purposes.

Now is the time to get the foundation stock for next year's flock. Select 10 of the best yearling hens or a smaller number, all of large frame, well developed, with long and broad bodies and well up on the legs, varieties considered, with comb and eyes bright, but the head not too large. Be sure that those selected are up to standard weight or at least within a pound of it, and lay large and uniform eggs. Mate such hens with a cockerel that is vigorous and of good type, from a good laying strain and that is not closely inbred. It is quite certain that the laying qualities come even more from the male than through the females.

An Old-Timer Whose Fame Lives Despite Passing Years

Champion White Rock Hen at the St. Louis World's Fair in 1904.

Poultry Problems Solved.

Diphtheretic Roup.

I am worried about my white plymouth rocks. They seemed well until about two weeks ago. Even now they eat heartily, but have some kind of trouble in the throat or windpipe. The nose runs and there is a rattle in the throat. They shake their heads. I do not believe that it is roup. One died and I examined it and found that the throat was about closed. It seems to affect the lungs. I feed oats, wheat, kafir, and the hens have plenty of range and green stuff. The quarters are roomy and they have been laying well.—Mrs. R. V. S., Medford, Ok.

The trouble unquestionably is diphtheretic roup. Iti s a very serious trouble and is highly infectious. You want to take the birds that show any signs of the difficulty and separate them. If they are bad and you can unmistakably see the mucus in the windpipe by pulling out the tongue, I would advise you to kill them. Birds that die of this trouble should be buried deeply or burned. I have not been successful in curing birds that have diptheretic roup in the shape of mucus forming in the windpipe. Your house should be thoroughly cleaned and fumigated. Sometimes girds with this trouble appear in some respects to be in good shape like yours; that is, they often have good appetites and appear to be quite well until mucus fills up the throat so that they cannot breathe.

Falling Dead.

Can you tell me what is the matter with my hens. They seem to be in perfect health. They eat well at night. In the morning I find one dead. It appears that they have simply fallen off the roost, dead. I have lost eight or ten this way. We feed plenty of table scraps mixed in a mash with bran. I feed corn at night. We have good, clean scratchang material and plenty of grit.—Mrs. F. W., Bonne Terre, Mo.

Yours is a difficult question to answer. If I should see the birds and the surroundings I might be able to tell more about the difficulty. The birds might die from more than one cause. Sometimes they will die of diphtheretic roup, without one having noticed beforehand there was anything the matter with them. It is not uncommon to have birds die just at the close of the winter when they are beginning to lay or should begin to lay, on account of being extremely fat. I haven't had this trouble myself. I believe in keeping birds in a pretty high state of flesh, but there is also a thing of having them too fat. Your quarters and feed may not be wholly sanitary, and it may be some sort of poison in the food or air. An experienced breeder wrote me recently that he thought most of the troubles are due to poor housing, but whether that is the trouble in your case I cannot say. Get the birds out of doors now. See that they have plenty of exercise and cut down the feed somewhat.

Another Case.

I have a flock of 15 or 20 Plymouth Rocks. For the past three years, at this time of the year, I lose three or four of them. They begin to stagger around for three or four days and then get so they cannot get around. I have an open-front house, 12x16, with plenty of straw where I feed them. I am sure the birds are not overfed. I am getting six or seven eggs a day from 14 hens. A few weeks ago I got an average of 10, one day I got 14. I am feeding morning and evening a three-pound tomato can of wheat. At noon, sprouted oats, and twice a week a hot mash composed of bran, middlings, cornmeal and alfalfa meal. I keep a hopper of bran and grit in the house and good water before them. For a fever remedy I give tonsillitis tablets, so called, one every two hours. I have a hen that has been sick over two weeks. The comb and wattles have a fine red appearance. First the head was hot and the legs were cold. I use the above mentioned tablets two or three days, also epsom salts, and used Sloan's Liniment on the legs. Then the legs got warm again, but the hen does not eat much and does not seem to get any better. Can you tell me what the trouble is and what the probable remedy would be?—J. H. H., East St. Louis.

Please note the answer given above to Mrs. F. W. of Bonne Terre. Your trouble seems to be similar to the other. I would suggest a similar handling of the situation. What the trouble is with the hen whose sickness you describe I do not know. I am not inclined to put much value upon the fever tablets.

PROF. T. C. QUISENBERRY on Post-Dispatch Poultry Staff

BEGINNING today, Prof. T. C. Quisenberry will become a regular contributor to the Post-Dispatch poultry page. Practically everybody who raises or is interested in poultry will realize that this means that Post-Dispatch readers will have before them each Sunday articles by the foremost poultry expert in the United States. Prof. Quisenberry, by his appreciation of the possibilities of the poultry industry and his ability to convey this appreciation to others, has added millions to the income of the State of Missouri through his work at the Mountain Grove Poultry Experiment Station.

To him alone is due the world-wide fame of the Mountain Grove Station, which has for several years been the source of the best suggestions for poultry raising. His practical bulletins have been a guide for the world. Because of the reputation he made in this work, Prof. Quisenberry was asked to take charge of the Poultry Department at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Later the live stock department was added to his duties. When he resigned as director of the Mountain Grove Station a few weeks ago he was asked to continue his publicity work through the Post-Dispatch poultry page and he has consented because he believes that through this medium he can reach the most poultry raisers. In addition to regular contributions, he will answer questions pertaining to poultry.

QUISENBERRY TELLS HOW TO MULTIPLY HATCHABLE EGGS

Strong, Vigorous Germ Is First Essential, Which Must Come From Birds Able to Impart It.

By T. E. QUISENBERRY,
Former Director of the Missouri Poultry Experiment Station, Mountain Grove.

With the return of each spring season there arises a chorus of complaints from poultry raisers who are unable to secure a satisfactory percentage of eggs that will hatch. These complaints seem to come most often from the owners of breeding flocks that are kept under intensive conditions.

The fact that many intensive poultrymen produce hatchable eggs in large numbers indicates that where trouble along this line is encountered it must be due to some fault, or faults, which can be sought out and remedied. Perhaps the remedy cannot be applied in time to do much good the first season, for nature works slowly. But "forewarned is forearmed," and he will succeed who determines to profit next season by this season's mistakes.

In the first place, it should be understood that all eggs are not fertile and that all fertile eggs are not hatchable. A fertile egg is one containing a live germ; but that germ may be so weak that even perfect incubating conditions will not suffice to develop it into a live chick capable of breaking its prison walls and emerging into the big world.

It naturally follows that the hatchable egg must contain a strong, vigorous germ, and that such a germ can only result from the mating of strong, vigorous birds, mature and in perfect health.

Mistake to Use Pullet Eggs.

Repeated careful experiments have demonstrated that it is a mistake to use pullets for the production of eggs for hatching, unless they were hatched very early the previous season and made a rapid and continuous growth to maturity. Even then they should be mated with mature cock birds rather than with cockerels. Eggs from immature pullets are smaller, the germs are weaker, and the resulting chicks are smaller and weaker than those hatched from hen eggs. There is no doubt that one common source of unsatisfactory hatchability is the use of immature pullets for breeding purposes.

Allowing breeding stock to become overfat is another common cause of infertility, weak germs and poor hatchability. Where birds of the larger breeds are kept confined it is very easy for them to become overfat unless special pains are taken to make them exercise, and, to limit the amount of fattening food included in the daily ration. They should be compelled to dig all of their grain feed out of a deep litter. Wheat straw makes the best litter, and a foot of it on the scratching floor is none too much.

Where the hatchability is not proving satisfactory, all meat food and condiments should be eliminated from the ration and an abundance of green food supplied. Skim milk or buttermilk where it can be secured, is a valuable addition to the ration for breeding stock. Avoid overfeeding. Keep the birds a little hungry and willing to work. They should only have all that they want to eat once a day, and that just before they go to roost at night.

Avoid Male Interference.

In flocks where there are two male birds, poor fertility is often due to the fact that the males interfere with each other. Where the breeding pen is large enough to require the presence of two males, by far the best plan is to alternate them, allowing one to be with the flock one day and the other the next. In this way the males are compelled to rest every other day, adding to their vigor, while their attentions to the females are not interfered with during the time that they are with the flock.

Where trouble with fertility is met with in a pen having only one male bird, another male should be immediately substituted. If the fault lay in the first male, eggs laid from 10 days to two weeks after the second male put in should be found to be more fertile.

Overcrowding, lice and mites, filthy quarters and every other condition tending to impair general health and vigor should be very carefully avoided.

Isolation and Dip for Sore Head Birds

One of the common diseases of poultry is chicken pox or sore head, yet a great many poultry raisers are puzzled over it when it appears in the flock. The one never-failing symptom of the ailment is the wart-like growths about the head, face comb and wattles. This disease is highly contagious, and if left to go unchecked will often pass through an entire flock. While not so dangerous as roup and some other poultry ailments, the affected birds should receive prompt attention, for it will weaken them, lower their vitality and fatal complications may set in.

The methods of controlling this disease are isolation and treatment of the affected birds. It is also necessary to disinfect the quarters and equipment. A strong solution of stock dip is best and cheapest for this purpose. Apply it by spraying. The use of carbolized vaseline has been found to be very effective when applied to the heads. This should be mixed in the proportion of a teacupful of lard or vaseline to a tablespoonful of crude carbolic acid. In very severe cases iodine will be most effective

Clean-Up Season for Birds and Plant Here

The time for spring "clean-ups" is here again. It is the time when accumulations of droppings and other filth about the house and yards should be cleared away, to be followed by the applications of washes and disinfecting agents to the inside of the poultry house and its equipment.

Plowing or spading the runs and yards is a very good way to dispose of filth and any possible infection that might cause trouble later. In cleaning out a house with an earth floor it is a good plan to remove two or three inches of the surface earth along with the filth and replace this with fresh earth from the outside.

George W. Hervey of the Arkansas Agricultural College suggests that a day be chosen when there is plenty of sunlight, which in itself is one of the best disinfecting and purifying agents. Begin work early in the morning. Removes birds, nest boxes, litter material and fixtures. Then give the house a thorough sweeping. Whitewash may now be applied with a spray pump or an old broom.

The lime for the wash should be slaked slowly, starting with warm water. Enough water should be added to bring the wash to a creaminess. If a spray pump is used, the wash must be strained. About one-quart of kerosine oil may be added to 12 quarts of mixture. It is wise also to add some disinfecting fluid. Clean nesting material should be placed in the nest boxes.

Incubators and brooders may be treated with any good disinfectant. Cresol is recommended, using a 7 per cent solution. In cleaning the incubator, the egg chamber must be sprayed thoroughly.

It is wise to go through the flock at monthly intervals and give each individual an application of blue ointment. Lice powders are effective, but require more labor than the blue ointment treatment. The following is an efficient powder advocated by the Maine station: Three parts of gasoline, 1 part carbolic acid, 90-95 per cent strength; plaster of paris as an absorbent. The plaster of paris is slowly added, using about four parts of the plaster to one quart of the mixture. The birds must be dusted thoroughly, especially in the fluff.

Prepare in Advance for Large Hatchings

Poultry raisers are advised every winter and spring to use incubators for hatching. Where the size of a poultry plant warrants the use of a machine this advice is very good but usually it does not go far enough. The poultryman who expects to use an incubator should make sure, first, that he is going to have a suitable place and adequate equipment to care for a large number of chicks hatched at one time. The man or woman with the first incubator is more likely to be caught unprepared than those having experience.

The safest plan is to have a brooder along with the incubator. It need not necessarily be bought, as it is possible to make a very good substitute at home A tight box, well insulated against changes of temperature, provided wi small openings near the top for ventil tion, and with a hover of rags or qui ing tacked to a frame and put in pla so that it will just touch the backs the chicks, are the essentials in a hom made brooder. A jug of hot wat wrapped in paper or cloth will keep the temperature on cold days or nigh in late winter or early spring.

Hatching and brooding by hens is n ture's way and a great many details care and feeding are avoided by do the work this way; but when hatch and brooded artificially these details b come very important. Chicks hatche and reared early must be cared for somewhat of a hothouse plan. They a warm weather creatures and will thriv only when these conditions are provide for them. When running out of doo with the thermometer registering 80 t 90 degrees they are in their natural en vironment. But hatched in the col bleak days of late winter or earl spring, ventilation, overcrowding an balanced feeds develop into factors which depend success or failure.

The Origin of Dry Feed for Baby Chicks

At this season of the year baby chicks are popping out of the shells by the millions, and a word as to the origin of the dry method of feeding baby chicks, which has become so popular, will no doubt be of interest. The honor of this discovery which has grown into such an enormous industry belongs to the late W. F. Chamberlain, who for years was Grain and Seed Inspector of the St. Louis Merchants' Exchange.

Chamberlain's first venture in poultry raising dates back to 1885, at Benton, Mo. His next poultry plant was at Old Orchard, Mo., where he located in 1893. Three years later, having secured much more acreage near Kirkwood, another St. Louis suburb, he engaged in the poultry business on a still larger scale, and soon became nationally known for the superb quality of his various flocks and his success as a poultryman. His very large and widely known Kirkwood plant was burned in 1914.

Chamberlain early learned that improper feeding was (and still is) the most prolific cause of loss to poultrymen. There are times when baby chicks die like flies, despite supposedly proper care. The question, then, of what constitutes "proper feeds" is of paramount importance, and this was the problem that Mr. Chamberlain set out to solve, some 30 years ago.

His experiments were along the line of providing the same variety of seeds, grains, etc., which the old hen endeavored to furnish her brood with, and which she searched for so diligently in the fields.

As Seed and Grain Inspector, Chamberlain was in the peculiar position of being able to secure a large variety of various seeds and grains with which to experiment with. Consequently, within a few years he was able to produce a perfectly balanced dry food ration, which he later started to manufacture in an extensive way, using the name "Chamberlain's Perfect Chick Feed."

The value of this discovery to the public is easily shown by the enormous plants which have been erected throughout the United States, and which are devoted exclusively to the manufacture of dry poultry feed. St. Louis enjoys the honor of having the largest chick feed mills of any city in the United States.

Big Profits Drawn From a Small Flock

The month of November, 1914, found me with 80 pullets on hand, Buckeyes, an all-purpose, average-sized variety, having dark red plumage, a pea comb and almost no wattles (hence no freezing), a plump breast and a game-like appearance. They were housed in an 8x10 open-front house, with dropping boards, and and 8x10 shed, on a 50x60 lot. Mornings they were fed about three pints of a commercial scratch feed in deep straw; at noon, the table scraps mixed with nearly two quarts of bran, were fed, and at night as much whole corn as they would eat. Sprouted oats furnished greens, and fresh water and grit were always provided.

By December probably two dozen of the pullets were "strung out" laying, and during the month laid 27 dozen eggs. In January 32 dozen and in February 31 dozen were laid, with several pullets sitting. Thus in the three winter months 90 dozen eggs were produced, an average of a dozen a day, by a few more than two dozen pullets.

The cost of feeding the flock was half a cent each per day, and a conservative estimate easily gives a profit of more than 100 per cent, besides the recreation and pleasure derived from tending them.

It may be noted in passing that during March the eggs sold for hatching netted me $1 per day, and in April half that, since my stock was pure-bred, some prize winners, and eggs were sold at semi-fancy prices. Now add to that $30 more for a few cockerels and pullets sold as breeders, and you will have another 100 per cent profit, this time reckoned on the annual feed bill as a basis.

This past Dcember I have kept 18 pullets and nine hens, several of the latter molting, and have gathered 23½ dozen eggs. Since it is not best to force breeders too much, I shall probably not get as high a yield this winter, as I now have some State Fair winners in my flock and hope to sell more eggs for hatching and fewer at the store. Then, too, hens do not produce as well as pullets.

Any city man on a back lot may keep a few pullets and get good results by following the method of feeding outlined above. I have used it and others, in various places and with different breeds of poultry, and always made good. However, I did not expect a gold mine. Be reasonable, even with hens.

ROY V. ELLIS, Troy, Mo.

Care of Setting Hen and Her Young Chicks

When you see a hen becoming broody, the first thing is to prepare a box for a nest. Put in plenty of straw, so she will be warm. Give the hen 13 eggs, if the weather is cold, and mark each one so that you will know the date it was set. Put the hen by herself, or else cover the box in such manner that she can get off easily, otherwise she will likely crush the eggs in trying to get out. Feed every other day; give her grain, grit and water.

On the eighteenth day dip the eggs in lukewarm water, but do not leave in water long. This is to help rot the shell. As soon as the chicks are out of the shell, take them from under the hen, cover and keep them in a warm place. As soon as the last chicks are out of the shell give the hen plenty of feed and water and take out the broken shells. When the chicks are dried off, put them under the hen and make the box dark. In 24 hours feed and water the hen again, and put her and the chicks in the box or brooder. Give sand for the chicks and grit for the hen. Give the little chicks bread crumbs soaked in sweet milk and keep the hen and chicks as quiet as possible for the first 48 hours. They need brooding more than something to eat. Feed no sloppy food, and keep the little ones in boxes at night, as cats and rats like young chickens. Do not handle or let anyone make playthings of them, as it hurts chicks to be handled too much.

I have been asked as to the cause of leg weakness in young chicks, and in reply will say that I have never heard of young chicks raised by hens having it. I think it is caused by too much heat at the top of the brooder and bad air, as we have never seen it in chicks raised in outside sheds. Let someone else give experience along these lins.

A MILLION IN A LUMP received by 12 men who invested $175 each in a new oil field. I want associates in a similar enterprise in the great oil fields of the Southwest. Investment required, $15 monthly for 10 months. Possible return to each subscriber, $1000 to $2500 annually. We drill in proven fields only until good dividends are assured. The Humble oil field is making millions for others, and our lease is in the heart of the Humble field, with producing oil wells in every direction. I do not want you to go into this deal unless you can spare $15 monthly for 10 consecutive months. Based on statistics and the law of averages, it is reasonably certain that long before the 10 months have passed we will have producing wells sufficient for splendid dividends. I want business people only in this enterprise—those who can afford to take a chance of a few dollars monthly, with the reasonable assurance of getting back hundreds where dollars are invested. One oil-producing company in Houston paid $3,300,000 dividends the last fiscal year. Stock in another oil company organized here last summer, with lease in Humble field not so large as our, now selling at 15 for 1. No commissions paid to anyone on your purchase of shares. No salary to any official until the company is paying dividends. Officials of company are business men of highest personal integrity and ability. Proof furnished. Shares at par, $10 per share, until first well is "brought in." We expect to commence drilling in a few days. I invite business people only to write for full details. C. S. Woods, Houston, Tex.

'BELFAST CHICKEN,' OLDEST PUGILIST IN WORLD, DIES

"Prof." Bill Clark, 90 Years Old, Widely Known in Sporting Circles Here.

"Prof." Bill Clark, 90 years old, once known in the prize ring as the "Belfast Chicken" and for many years a natatorium proprietor and swimming teacher in St. Louis died suddeny at his home, 3513 Morganford road, yesterday.

Mrs. Clark went to wak her husband and found him unconscious. A physician was called, but Clark sank rapidly and efforts to restore consciousness were futile. He died in a few minutes.

Clark long had been a picturesque figure in the sporting life of St. Louis. In his youth he was a noted fighter at county fairfs and race meets in England. He fought as a bantamweight and his indomitable fighting spirit won for him the nickname which clung to him through life.

Though somewhat weakened by age, Clark apparently was in good health and spirits Friday and at his home he celebrated St. Patrick's day by singing an Irish song.

Funeral by Elks.

Clark had been a Mson 60 years and an Elk since the formation of that order. The Elks will have charge of his funeral, which will be at 2:30 p. m. tomorrow, from the Wagoner Chapel, 3621 Olive street.

In his younger days Clark developed many boxers and later he was equally successful in training and developing swimmers. He was an unfailing attendant at all boxing bouts in St. Louis until a few months ago, when the infirmities of age began to tell on him. He was noted for his bluff and hearty manner and his rich cockney dialect.

With his fringe of white beard under his chin Clark looked like a seafaring man of the old school or like a character which had stepped out of one of Dickens' novels.

Came to America in 1851.

Clark was born in Ireland in 1826. In recent years he often was called "the oldest prizefighter in the world." Record books extending back almost to the beginning of the prizefighting game do not show any records of Clark's battles, although the victories and defeats of other fighters who were contemporary with him are shown. Clark fought a long time ago and his friends took his stories of his prowess largely on faith. Nevertheless he had the reputation of having been a great fighter, however silent the annals of the prizering might be on that subject.

Clark's natatorium, which he opened near Nineteenth and Pine streets in 1880, was a famous place in its day. Many St. Louisans in the last two generations learned to swim there.

Clark came to America in 1851. After running a saloon and "boxers' retreat" in New York and training fighters in San Francisco, he came to St. Louis in the late 70s and had lived here since then.

NAME OF SCHOOL IS CHANGED

Anna Sneed Cairns, president of Forest Park University, announced last night that the board of curators had decided to change the institution's name to Forest Park College, because the distinction between universities and colleges is now being finely drawn.

Mrs. Cairns was the guest of the Alumni and Students' Association at a luncheon yesterday at the American Annex in honor of her seventy-fifth birthday anniversary and her 55 years as head of the school, which she founded in 1861.

'BELFAST CHICKEN,' OLDEST PUGILIST IN WORLD, DIES

"Prof." Bill Clark, 90 Years Old, Widely Known in Sporting Circles Here.

"Prof." Bill Clark, 90 years old, once known in the prize ring as the "Belfast Chicken" and for many years a natatorium proprietor and swimming teacher in St. Louis died suddeny at his home, 3513 Morganford road, yesterday.

Mrs. Clark went to wak her husband and found him unconscious. A physician was called, but Clark sank rapidly and efforts to restore consciousness were futile. He died in a few minutes.

Clark long had been a picturesque figure in the sporting life of St. Louis. In his youth he was a noted fighter at county fairfs and race meets in England. He fought as a bantamweight and his indomitable fighting spirit won for him the nickname which clung to him through life.

Though somewhat weakened by age, Clark apparently was in good health and spirits Friday and at his home he celebrated St. Patrick's day by singing an Irish song.

Funeral by Elks.

Clark had been a Mson 60 years and an Elk since the formation of that order. The Elks will have charge of his funeral, which will be at 2:30 p. m. tomorrow, from the Wagoner Chapel, 3621 Olive street.

In his younger days Clark developed many boxers and later he was equally successful in training and developing swimmers. He was an unfailing attendant at all boxing bouts in St. Louis until a few months ago, when the infirmities of age began to tell on him. He was noted for his bluff and hearty manner and his rich cockney dialect.

With his fringe of white beard under his chin Clark looked like a seafaring man of the old school or like a character which had stepped out of one of Dickens' novels.

Came to America in 1851.

Clark was born in Ireland in 1826. In recent years he often was called "the oldest prizefighter in the world." Record books extending back almost to the beginning of the prizefighting game do not show any records of Clark's battles, although the victories and defeats of other fighters who were contemporary with him are shown. Clark fought a long time ago and his friends took his stories of his prowess largely on faith. Nevertheless he had the reputation of having been a great fighter, however silent the annals of the prizering might be on that subject.

Clark's natatorium, which he opened near Nineteenth and Pine streets in 1880, was a famous place in its day. Many St. Louisans in the last two generations learned to swim there.

Clark came to America in 1851. After running a saloon and "boxers' retreat" in New York and training fighters in San Francisco, he came to St. Louis in the late 70s and had lived here since then.

NAME OF SCHOOL IS CHANGED

Anna Sneed Cairns, president of Forest Park University, announced last night that the board of curators had decided to change the institution's name to Forest Park College, because the distinction between universities and colleges is now being finely drawn.

Mrs. Cairns was the guest of the Alumni and Students' Association at a luncheon yesterday at the American Annex in honor of her seventy-fifth birthday anniversary and her 55 years as head of the school, which she founded in 1861.

Sadly missed by his PARENTS.

In Memoriam.

In loving remembrance of our dear son and brother, Hugo Hofmann, who departed this life March 19, 1914.

Two years have passed away,
When, at the break of day,
Your life faded away.
The snowflakes were falling,
The Lord was calling
His little lamb to the fold.
It was hard to part,
But oh, how sweet for you
To rest for ever on the Savior's breast.

Sadly missed by
FATHER AND MOTHER, BROTHERS AND SISTERS.

In Memoriam.

In loving remembrance of my dear husband and our dear father and father-in-law, John M. Darr, who departed this life March 18, 1915.

Dear father, one year has flown
Since you were called away;
How sadful is the memory
Of that fateful day.
Through life you lived and taught us
To abide by God's great will;
This solemn thought, dear father,
Doth our hearts with courage fill.
Peace be thine, most precious one,
Ever faithful, kind and true,
Time may wither the rarest gifts
But never my love for you.

In Memoriam.

In loving memory of our dear mother, Mary Beatrice Carmody Meehan, on March 21, 1915.

'Twas Passion Sunday,
And the first day of spring,
When the clock struck 10,
Then the half hour 1.
Oh, mother, we knew then
That the hour had come.
Just one year ago today
Since our dear mother passed away.
O, Lord, keep green the grace that lies
Beneath the wide and starry skies;
Keep sweet with sleep, and give her rest,
Whose hands are folded on her breast.
A loving mother, true and kind,
No friend like her on earth we'll find.
God called her home, it was His will,
But in our hearts she lingers still;
For all of us she did her best,
May God grant her eternal rest.

Sadly missed by her HUSBAND, CHILDREN AND BROTHER.

Lake and Franklin sts., Chicago.

WE WANT SALESMEN.

Our line groceries, provisions, paints, automobile and machine oils, roofing, stock and poultry food.

Sells to farmers and other citizens who eat, have buildings, or own livestock.

Sells because the goods have the quality and the price that we can give by selling in large quantities direct to the consumer.

Our salesmen make $500 to $5000 per year. Their ability and activity govern that. We give them the right goods and at the right price and the fact that all of them don't make big money only proves that all men are not equal as salesmen.

You or anyone else who answers this ad can get our proposition, but don't answer unless you know that you can't make a dollar without putting in a dollar's worth of work.

TAXPAYERS, ATTENTION!

Assessments on real estate for 1916 taxes have in many instances been radically increased. NEW BUILDINGS are now assessed at 100% OF THEIR ACTUAL COST, and not on a basis of 60% as heretofore.

Examine the assessment of your property at the Assessor's office in the City Hall without delay, and if you have been affected by the new assessments, call at 808 Chestnut Street AT ONCE, as your co-operation is desired to properly place this matter before the Board of Equalization which meets tomorrow, March 20th, and will be in session only four weeks.

A New Home Every Two Weeks

In the past twelve months an average of one fine home every two weeks has been started or contracted for in Ames Place.

This development was the natural consequence of seven solid facts:

1—Location.

Ames Place is due west and just west of the best residence property in town.

2—Surroundings.

Ames Place has a perpetual park on the south in the grounds of Washington University.

3—Accessibility.

Ames Place is served by three car lines, but intersected by none. It is reached by a fine motoring boulevard through Parkview, but is off the line of speeders and traffic of all kinds.

4—Improvements.

Ames Place to-day represents $190,000 worth of the best in streets, sidewalks, alleys, gates, electric wiring, double piping and other up-to-the-minute improvements.

5—Restrictions.

Ames Place is under perpetual restrictions of its own and has a half-mile of solidly restricted property all around it.

6—Schools.

Ames Place families will be able to send their children from kindergarten to post-graduate diploma within four blocks of home.

7—Prices.

Ames Place is at least $30 a foot cheaper than any similar home property on the St. Louis market.

Motor through Parkview or take University car and see for yourself. The more you know about real estate the more convincing you'll find a look at

Goldilocks and the Three Bears

NOT a very timid Goldilocks is this one in Jessie Wilcox Smith's picture! And surely that one in the middle is not the ferocious old Papa Bear of the story, he with the big voice and the hard chair and the uncomfortable bed! Ah, well, children, things are not always what they seem in books. Besides, haven't you always suspected that it was really a family of rather benevolent bears whose home the little girl invaded when they were out taking a walk? They couldn't have been so very terrible, you know, or Goldilocks wouldn't have got off so easily after eating Baby Bear's dinner all up and breaking his comfy little chair all to pieces!

THIS COUNTRY'S RECORD OF ITS NEUTRALITY;

AMERICA'S GRIEVANCES AGAINST WARRING NATIONS

FEW persons realize the nature and extent of the diplomatic crises which have arisen between the United States and the belligerent countries of Europe. Everybody knows, in a general way, that a vast amount of correspondence has been necessary, but not many know the items are so numerous that a mere chronology of them is an imposing document.

The following is a compilation of the most important of them, arranged chronologically. It will be found relatively complete:

1914.

AUG. 4.—President Wilson proclaims the neutrality of the United States.

AUG. 5.—President Wilson offers the good offices of the United States to determine whether there is a peaceable solution of Europe's troubles.

AUG. 22.—The United States writes to Japan that it understands Japan's entry into the war will not disturb the Open Door policy in the Orient.

SEPT. 16.—A delegation of Belgians appears to complain of alleged German atrocities; Germany complains of alleged Belgian atrocities. The President informs both sides the United States cannot interfere at this time.

OCT. 4.—Sunday, observed throughout the United States as a day of prayer for peace.

NOV. 18.—U. S. S. Tennessee fired on by Turks in Smyrna harbor.

NOV. 19.—The United States demands of Turkey an explanation of the Tennessee affair.

NOV. 27.—Secretary Bryan announces that the Tennessee incident is closed, the firing having been unintentional.

DEC. 28.—The United States protests to Great Britain "in the most friendly spirit," against the detention of vessels laden with American goods consigned to neutral ports.

1915.

JAN. 10.—In reply Great Britain offers redress whenever its naval action exceeds the right and welcomes an arrangement to prevent mistakes and to make prompt reparation when they are made.

JAN. 24.—Secretary of State Bryan makes a categorical denial of 20 specific charges by German sympathizers of discriminations by the American Government against Germany and Austria.

JAN. 27.—The American freighter William P. Frye, captured and sunk by the German commerce raider, Prinz Eitel Friedrich, after the Frye's crew had been taken off.

FEB. 4.—Germany declares the waters around England, Ireland and Scotland a war zone and warns neutral ships of the hazards of sailing therein.

FEB. 10.—The United States sends simultaneous notes to Great Britain and Germany, warning the former that it will involve dangerous consequences if the American flag is used on British vessels and warning the latter against "unprecedented breaches" of the international rules of warfare in the use of submarines which would be involved if vessels were sunk before their unneutral character or contraband cargo had been ascertained.

FEB. 16.—Germany offers to withdraw its submarine warfare if Great Britain will permit the free movement of foodstuffs for the German civil population. Great Britain seizes the American ship Wilhelmina, laden with a cargo of wheat, in Falmouth harbor and America wires protest.

FEB. 17.—Great Britain replies to the American note of Feb. 10, saying it will be as lenient as possible with neutral shipping.

FEB. 18.—Germany disclaims responsibility for "accidents" to neutral vessels in the war zone.

FEB. 19.—Great Britain says the Wilhelmina will be sent to a prize court for the adjudication of the question and assures the United States that while it is not unlawful to do so, it discourages the use of neutral flags for British vessels.

FEB. 27.—The Dacia, a freighter, laden with cotton, which had been transferred from German to American ownership, is seized by a French cruiser and sent to a prize court.

MARCH 2.—Germany offers to modify its submarine warfare in certain respects provided Great Britain will recede from certain positions as to contraband and conditional contraband.

MARCH 15.—Great Britain publishes the celebrated "Order in Council," declaring all foodstuffs destined to German civilians confiscate because controlled by the military authorities and rejects all German propositions of compromise.

MARCH 28.—Passenger steamer Falaba sunk by submarine; one American among 120 killed.

MARCH 30.—United States protests to Great Britain and France against certain parts of the blockade plan and announces it expects reparation for every violation of neutral rights.

APRIL 11.—The German Ambassador publishes a memorandum criticising the American attitude as to shipping war materials and as to the British treatment of America's trade with Germany.

APRIL 12.—The State Department announces that Britain has requisitioned the cargo of the Wilhelmina and offers to pay the owners for the delay.

APRIL 21.—The United States in reply to the German Ambassador's protest of April 11 notifies Germany in effect that an embargo on war munitions would be an unneutral act.

APRIL 28.—The American oil tank cruiser Cushing is damaged by a bomb dropped from a German aeroplane over the North Sea.

MAY 1.—The American oiler Gulflight is sunk off the Scilly Islands; three of its crew are killed and survivors say it was torpedoed by a German submarine.

MAY 7.—The liner Lusitania is torpedoed and sunk off the Irish coast and 1150 persons are killed, including more than 100 Americans.

MAY 13.—The first American Lusitania protest, signed by Secretary Bryan, is sent to Germany.

MAY 25.—The American freighter Nebraska damaged by a torpedo off the Irish coast.

MAY 28.—Germany replies to Lusitania note asking for a statement of the evidence so that the two countries might have a complete basis of fact.

MAY 31.—Germany acknowledges that a German submarine attacked the Gulflight but declares the captain did not see the American flag until the order to fire had been given.

JUNE 8.—Secretary of State Bryan resigns rather than sign the second Lusitania note because he believes it unpeaceable in tone.

JUNE 9.—Second Lusitania note, signed by Acting Secretary of State Lansing, sent to Germany.

JUNE 24.—United States demands that the Frye controversy be settled by diplomatic discussion rather than by a prize court.

JUNE 29.—Austria sends a protest to the United States against the sale of war munitions to the allies.

JULY 7.—The United States declines to negotiate through German Ambassador on Germany's expected reply to the submarine notes.

JULY 8.—Germany pledges the safety of American vessels if they are specially marked and offers to permit the United States to put its protecting mark on four enemy passenger steamers.

JULY 21.—The United States sends a third note to Germany relative to the rights of neutral passengers on merchant ships and declares the German note of July 8 "very unsatisfactory," declaring that the United States will regard the jeopardizing of American lives in the submarine warfare as a "deliberately unfriendly" act.

JULY 28.—Germany admits the Nebraskan was hit by a torpedo fired without warning by submarines because it displayed no flag and the captain thought it was a British vessel.

JULY 30.—Germany offers indemnity for the Frye and offers to refer the legal questions involved to The Hague tribunal.

AUG. 3.—Three British notes regarding the "blockade" of Germany are made public by the State Department.

AUG. 17.—The United States accepts the indemnity offer in the Frye case but proposes that the matter be referred to The Hague in such a way as will cover all disputed points.

AUG. 19.—The White Star liner Arabic torpedoed and sunk off the Irish coast and 20 persons, Americans included, are killed.

AUG. 24.—German Ambassador asks that a definite stand on the Arabic case be postponed until the German version is received.

SEPT. 1.—German Ambassador announces that hereafter liners will not be sunk without warning.

SEPT. 4.—The Allen Line steamship Hesperian is torpedoed and sunk off the Irish coast, two Americans on board rescued.

SEPT. 7.—Germany declares that the Arabic was sunk by a submarine when the latter's commander believed it was about to ram the submarine; regret expressed for loss of American life but Germany denies its obligation to indemnify the victims.

SEPT. 9.—Washington demands the recall of Ambassador Dumba of Austria for activity in propaganda against the neutrality of the United States.

SEPT. 23.—In a note on the Frye case Germany declared American vessels would not be sunk unless the cargo is of absolute contraband.

OCT. 5.—Germany disavows the sinking of the Arabic and says stringent orders have been issued to prevent a repetition of the act. America notifies Turkey Armenian massacres must cease, it being estimated that 800,000 had lost their lives.

NOV. 3.—The United States again protests against the British methods of blockade as interfering with American rights.

NOV. 9.—An Austrian submarine sinks the Ancona; 100, including several Americans, killed.

DEC. 3.—United States demands the recall of the German military and naval attaches, Boy-Ed and Von Papen.

DEC. 4.—American oil tank steamer Petrolite fired on off Crete by Austrian submarine and one man injured.

DEC. 5.—Ambassador Page in London protests against British seizure of American ships without prize court proceedings.

DEC. 6.—United States demands that Austria disavow the sinking of the Ancona, punish the submarine commander and indemnify American victims.

DEC. 14.—America protests to France against action of the cruiser Descartes taking Germans and one American off ships bound to the West Indies. (The American was released Dec. 25 and the others Jan. 2.)

DEC. 18.—Austria makes preliminary reply in Ancona case asking for America's facts, saying she is ready in principle to exchange opinions and asks a schedule of the American legal maxims.

DEC. 22.—United States refused to discuss legal aspects of Ancona affair or give bill of particulars, saying Austrian admission that vessel was fired upon after she stopped is sufficient.

DEC. 25.—America protests to Great Britain against action of British warship in stopping the American ship China and taking Germans and Americans off.

DEC. 30.—British steamer Persia sunk by mine or torpedo near Alexandria, Egypt; American consul at Aden among the killed.

DEC. 31.—Austria replies it will pay indemnity in Ancona affair and says commander has been punished for not taking into consideration the panic of the passengers.

1916.

JAN. 7.—Germany in two communications offers to pay indemnity for Lusitania victims, withholds admission of

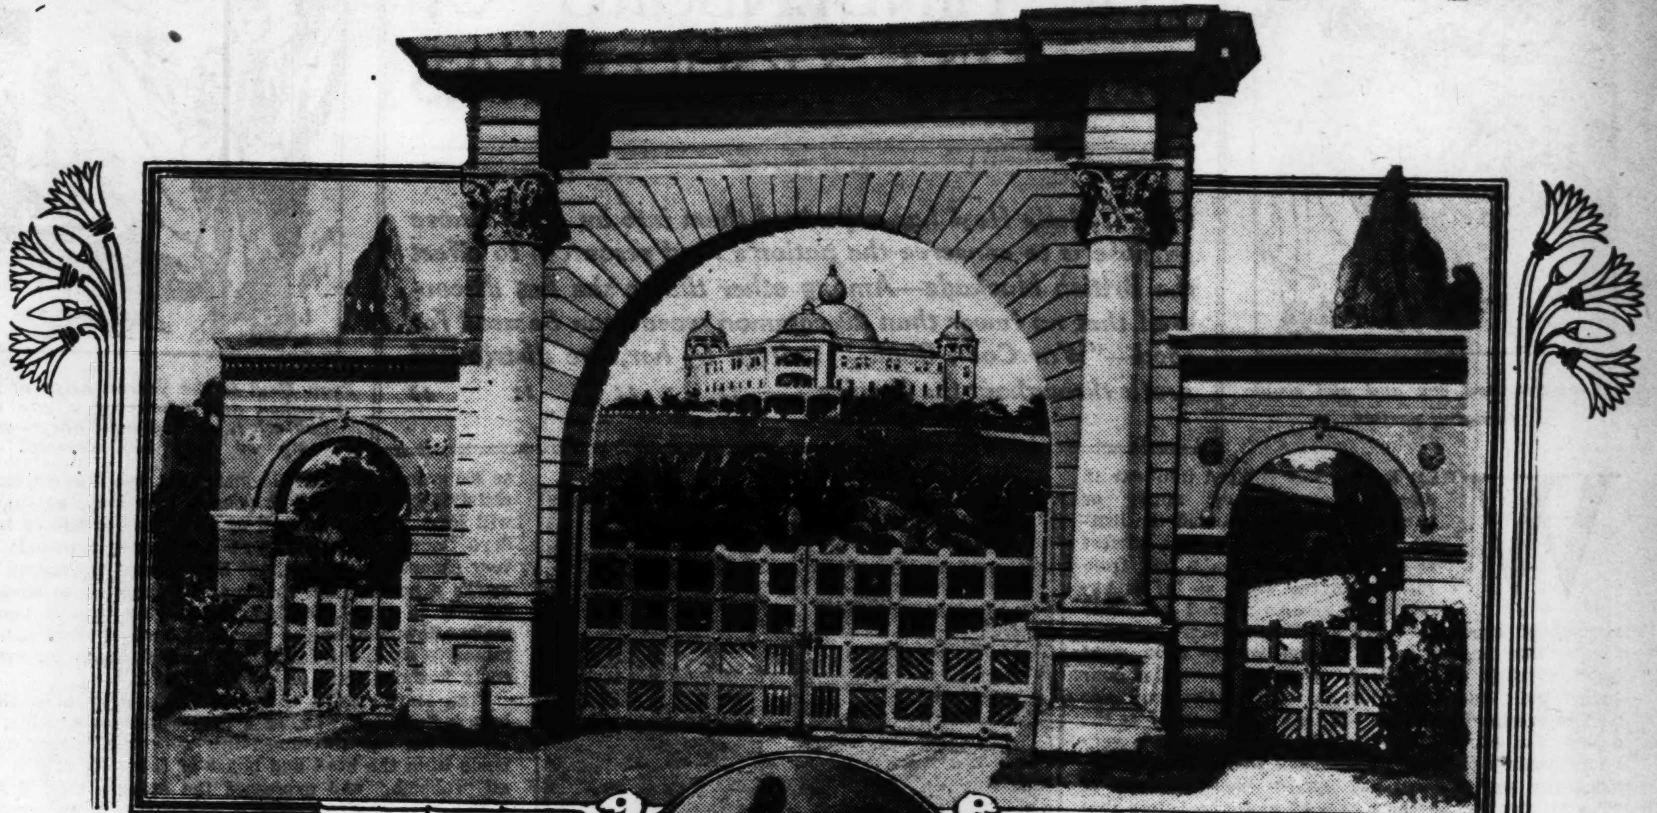
Who Will Get Al Spalding's $2,000,000?



Theosophist Temple at Point Loma, Cal.

The sporting goods manufacturer's will bequeathes it to his widow, disciple of Mahatma Tingley's Point Loma Theosophy cult—His sons have filed a contest to keep the money in the family believing that, otherwise, it will finally go into the treasury of the mysterious organization which worships under the "amethyst dome" of the California colony :: ::

MRS. KATHERINE TINGLEY

ONCE more has a merely human obstacle been rolled into the "path" toward the Ultimate Oneness of those devotees of theosophy at Point Loma, Cal., who, under the amethyst dome of their temple, are yearning towards the universal brotherhood of humanity. It is nothing more or less than a grossly materialistic lawsuit to break a will disposing of more than $2,000,000.

Two heirs of the late A. G. Spalding, once noted baseball pitcher, who, afterwards, became a multi-millionaire through trading in sporting goods, apparently have no desire to see the greater part of their father's fortune go towards shifting the centers of volition, consciousness and active memory from the lower to the higher "principles." They seem, in other words, to be trying to prevent the money, earned through wagon-tongue bats and infielder's mitts, being spent in an effort to hasten the day when the "inner truth" will be revealed to those who are anxious to see the Dharma or Eternal Law, face to face.

Put theosophically, the True Mahatma, the Divine Adept, the Esoteric Core, Mrs. Katherine A. Westcott-Cooke-Parent Tingley, has once more been assailed by the Lords of Darkness, the Malignant Powers of Death-in-Life.

Put in the language of the Divine Mahatma's gambler brother, Jim Westcott, who once said "A man must always do one of two things, win or lose" old Albert G. Spalding having sat in Mrs. Tingley's game, his family is 'hollering.'"

Expressed in the vernacular of the dear peepul, Albert Goodwill Spalding Jr., adopted son of A. G. Spalding, and Keith Spalding, son by his first wife, have brought suit against Mrs. Elizabeth Churchill Mayer-Spalding, their step-mother, and Mrs. Tingley to set aside the will whereby the millionaire sporting goods man gave the sons only a nominal sum and left the bulk of his fortune to Mrs. Mayer-Spalding. The step-mother is a follower of the Divine Mahatma, and associated with her in her enterprises at Point Loma, including the Yara Yoga School of Theosophy, the School for the Revival of the Lost Mysteries of Antiquity, the Isis School of Music and Drama and the Colony of the Universal Brotherhood.

The "grand old man of baseball" died at San Diego last September and left this considerable fortune, out of which he provided sparingly for his own son, for the son of his wife and for the adopted son, who now joins the suit. But the bulk went to the widow unconditionally, and his two sons charge that this means the estate has virtually been left to Mrs. Tingley. Keith Spalding of Chicago, own son of the sportsman, sued some time ago. He was then joined in action by his adopted brother, both making similar charges, except that the adopted son avers that his mother and Mrs. Tingley tried, four years ago, to enlist him in a conspiracy to influence his father in the making of a will then not drawn and that the two women also kept from him the fact that their father's fortune is due them and not to the Mahatma, who broods in her palace and calls herself the Purple Mother of her cult. The adopted son is now in the trenches in France, fighting for England.

The whole case calls up again the stories of two remarkable people—A. G. Spalding and Katharine Tingley. One may skip lightly over that of the man who began life as a baseball pitcher, amassed a fortune from the appurtenances of the sport, became a theosophist in his declining years and was nearly elected to the United States Senate. But that of the woman is perennial in interest, romance, mystery, and something besides.

On the heights of Point Loma, just out of San Diego, in the center of orange groves and fat farm lands, stands the amethyst-domed Aryan temple of—theosophy, should one say? Rather of Katharine Tingley. In and about this pretentious structure live and move her hundreds of followers, worshippers, disciples. Her word is law, her power absolute. In her pet dog was supposed to dwell the reincarnated spirit of her noted predecessor, William Q. Judge, as head of the cult. She claims the successorship to the spiritual hierarchy of Confucius and Buddha, of Jesus and Mahomet.

In spite of the attacks of the Gerry society, years ago when she brought some children from Cuba to enter her school, in spite of assaults from newspapers, courts, individuals, this woman has managed to attract to her and hold wealthy men and women in numbers. Lyman J. Gage, once Secretary of the Treasury of the United States was among the first to be attached to her. Spalding was another. E. A. Neresheimer, a New York diamond merchant; Frank W. Pierce of New York and Mrs. William Patterson, a millionaire widow of Newcastle, Pa., are others who joined her cult and became courtiers at Point Loma.

Here this remarkable woman is said to conduct a court which would make envious the old black monarchs of Haiti, with their Marquis of Marmalade and Duke of Limonade. Worshippers wrapped in cheese-cloth togas approach her dais on all fours. Men and women of high position in a workaday world bow obsequiously to her lap dog. The inner ritual, the workings of the mysteries are unknown.

But, remarkable as are these things, they cannot outdo their fountain head. This woman is a poser. She captivates the imagination. In her cult her autobiographical history sets her down as having originated about 1200 B. C., when she was on a pastoral pilgrimage in ancient Egypt, accompanied by the late Mme. Blavatsky. Her reappearances since then in various incarnations are all set down, and for her followers these writings are the facts.

How remarkable they seem, translated into this mortal palaver of ours. Katharine Tingley was born Katharine Westcott, daughter of a hotelkeeper of Newburyport, Mass., and a Puritan. And the date of her appearance on earth is transferred down from the Pharoahs to the period of 1850. She was sent to a convent in Montreal as a girl. Her type of mind and personality was not conventional.

Katharine Westcott wound up a rebellious girlhood by fleeing from her convent. In 1868, at a tender age, she was married in Savannah, Ga., to Richard Henry Cook, a typographer, but they did not long remain felicitous. It is said he divorced her, alleging desertion; though here is a point in dispute Her next husband was a prosaic individual named George W. Parent, a New Yorker, who made his living as detective and spotter for a local street railway. And her third adventure was with Philo B. Tingley, who is said to have been extremely spiritual for a steamship agent's stenographer.

Between the eras of Parent and Tingley there was an interesting hegira in this woman's life, a period of poverty and stress about the inhospitable pavements of New York. In this interval Mrs. Tingley did many things to sustain herself, in common with the great corps of other women in the fell grip of circumstances. At times she operated boarding and rooming houses; again she tried to make a living as a medium. The latter art she studied under the direction of Prof. Paul McCarthy, who was an adept at the practical aspects of this interesting profession. Then came the marriage with Tingley and somewhat better circumstances. And next the real impulsion of her life. Katharine Tingley met and came to know intimately the late William Quan Judge, head of the American theosophists. She was associated with him for some time and on his death it was found he had named her as adept to succeed him.

Katharine Westcott's career had not been sufficiently varied, so she began a tour of the world for the purpose of spreading her doctrines. On her return she began the building of the institution at Point Loma, the Aryan Temple of the amethyst dome, whereunder she sits as purple mother and looks out upon the purple Pacific. Perhaps she looks into an ocean of the mystical as Balboa did once at the Pacific from his peak in Darien; perhaps her eyes and dreams are fastened upon other things. The sons of A. G. Spalding say so. Others have said so before.

Mrs. Tingley's Aryan Temple, her amethyst dome, her Yara Yoga school, her school of ancient mysteries have cost much money; perhaps a million dollars, all of which came from her followers. In 1910 George L. Patterson, a banker of Newcastle, Pa., brought suit against Mrs. Tingley, demanding an accounting of the estate of his mother, who got a million dollars under the will of her husband and went forthwith to join Mrs. Tingley's colony. At death she left only $300,000, half of which she willed the Purple Mother. Banker Patterson complained that at 68 his white-haired mother had been married to Clark Thurston, a prominent follower of the Mahatma. He demanded to know what had become of the other $700,000, once his dead parent's property.

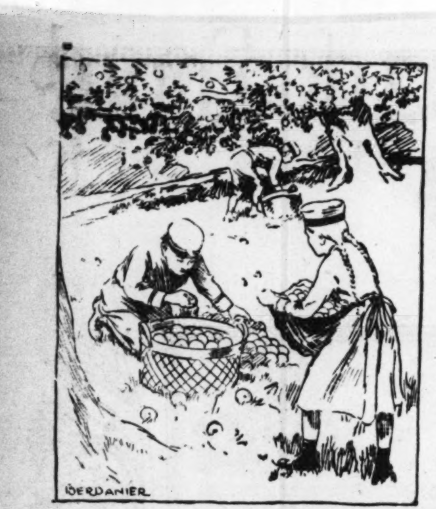
This was not the first litigation of the kind, nor the last. Mrs. Tingley's course at Point Loma has been a long succession of lawsuits of every kind and character. Indeed, for one who professes a deep desire for universal brotherhood, for a woman who once is said to have over-raised her ambitious eyes in the direction of the Nobel prize for peace, she has been exceptionally belligerent in the legal way. And now comes the Spaldings. To understand their case it were wise to go back to the romance that is the pediment of the whole structure.

Back in 1869, before A. G. Spalding had risen higher than the pedestal on which baseball pitchers stood in those socially chauvinistic days, he wooed in Rockford, Ill., a young girl named Elizabeth Churchill. They quarreled and Spalding soon went East, where he married another, and lived happily with her until her death in 1908. Elizabeth Churchill, too, had married in the meantime. Her husband was named Mayer. It is said that he has been dead many years.

Albert Goodwill Spalding and Elizabeth Churchill Mayer were to meet again. Let the theosophists explain it as they will, let them plaster it with predestination and obscure it with the mystical machinations of a divine purpose, the simple fact remains that these two people were married in 1910. If there was any more subtle motivation behind this union than about the hurly-burly of life in general one cannot say.

At all events, Mrs. Mayer, then for some years a follower and close friend of Mrs. Tingley at Point Loma, married the millionaire. She soon got him to Point Loma and the mystic allure of the purple dome. Thenceforward he, too, bowed before the divine adept from Newburyport, whose brother bought out Canfield.

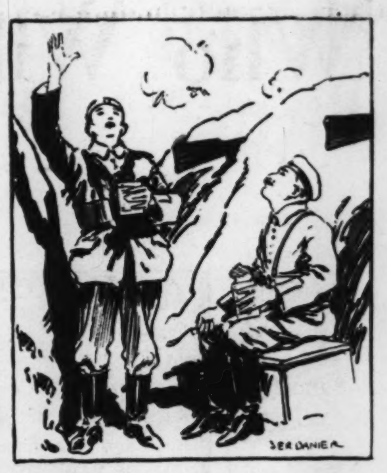
And when he died, last year, this rich man left his own sons about $35,000, it is said; gave about $100,000 to his adopted boy and left the rest to his widow, to the devotee of Mrs. Tingley and the sweetheart of his youth. The sons tried to compromise with the widow, rather than accomplish a breach, but were coldly refused. Then they instituted action, alleging undue influence over the father on the part of this wife and hinting at the complicity of Mrs. Tingley. Their attorneys say, in fact, that if the will is left unshaken it will mean that Mrs. Tingley will eventually be the chief heir.



She organized boy and girl scout foraging parties.

THE HINDENBURG OF GERMAN HOUSEWIVES

Frau Hedwig Heyl has organized them into an army whose purpose is to conserve the nation's food resources to offset the British blockade—Among other things she has discovered that no fewer than 20 common weeds can be used for food—"War Cook Books," written by her, are distributed gratis throughout the Empire :: :: :: ::



Frau Heyl is the patron saint of the trenches and whenever a can of goulash is opened some one rises up to call her blessed.

WHEN Europe was plunged into war 18 months ago, Germany might or might not have anticipated the British order in council, which almost shut the Kaiser's realm off from the rest of the world so far as imports and exports of food and other articles of commerce were concerned, and compelled the civilian population to depend largely upon what could be raised within the limits of the empire for their sustenance. But when this did happen Germany was no less prepared than she was in a military way at the outbreak of hostilities. That she was is due in a very large measure to one woman—Frau Hedwig Heyl, who, since the war started, has gained the sobriquet of "The Hindenburg of the Kitchen," and who before that was known as "the mother of Berlin."

Fraul Heyl is said to be, next to the German Empress, the best known woman in Germany. She is the personification of that for which German housewives have become famous—cooking. When Hindenburg was leading his vast army to its great victory in the region of the Mazurian lakes, Frau Heyl was, figuratively speaking, marching at the head of another army within the borders of Germany—an army of women organized to promote public welfare and household economics.

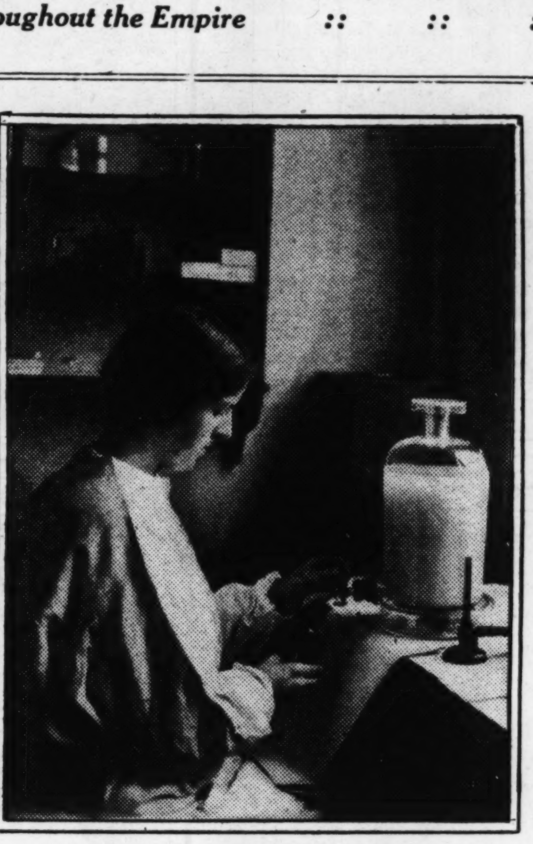
To use another figure of speech, Frau Heyl's whole life has been spent in the kitchen. Thus, when the war broke out, there she was, having been providentially raised up to meet a great crisis. How she met it is interestingly told by a correspondent who visited her recently and talked to her, naturally, in her kitchen, where she is continually experimenting with everything that might possibly be turned into a dish of nutritive value. Some of the edibles she has discovered were not dreamed of before the war.

Frau Heyl, early in her career, taught housekeeping to Victoria, Princess of Schaumburg-Lippe, a sister of Kaiser Wilhelm. Later, she wrote the "A B C of the Kitchen," which she dedicated to her royal pupil. This book is regarded as the housekeepers' bible throughout Germany. The Empress Frederick, then Crown Princess of Germany, requested Frau Heyl to take the young Princess as a pupil, declaring that "If I send her to the chef de cuisine of the palace she will only learn to imitate; if I send her to an eminent professor, she will get only a smattering of scientific knowledge; whereas, with you, I feel that she will receive the essential combination of science and practice."

Science and practice—these are the elements which Frau Heyl has brought into her work as unofficial supervisor of the composite German kitchen since war has made it such an important factor in preserving the life of the nation. What follows, then, is the story of what Frau Heyl has done to conserve the food resources of Germany to offset the effect of the British blockade.

As though foreseeing what would occur, Frau Heyl, in the very opening weeks of the war, gathered about her three or four of her most efficient aids and organized what is known as the "Woman's National Public Service League." The effect of this was to mobilize the women of Germany as effectually as the men were assembled to take the field. Then she organized and maintained at her own expense the first relief kitchen for what she called the "shame-faced poor," musicians, stage folk and teachers thrown out of employment by the war. In a period of 10 months, the time in which the kitchen was in operation, 300,000 persons were served to a palatable and substantial dinner at a cost for each meal of only 30 pfennigs, or about 7 cents of American money.

This kitchen was under the personal direction of Frau Heyl's daughter, whose gift of organization seems to have been inherited from her mother. Frau Heyl, in addition to establishing the kitchen, began laying in, as soon as war's alarm was sounded, supplies of staple food articles, for instance, placing with a Rumanian firm an order for 10,000 marks' worth of white navy beans, the price of which since has been quadrupled. She converted a large factory formerly belonging to her husband, and of which she is now one of the business managers, into a canning factory for the manufacture of meats and vegetables into the savory stew known as "goulash." Millions of tins of this concoction have been sent to the front, either as part of the regular army stores or as "Liebesgaben," as the gifts to the men on the firing line are called.



Everything is first tested in Frau Heyl's own laboratory and kitchen before it is recommended to the public.

Due to Frau Heyl's experimentation, the poorer classes of Germany have been enabled to enjoy marmalade all winter. She organized the Boy and Girl Scouts and sent them a-foraging to the fruit farms and country estates, soliciting the fallen fruit. "War marmalade" was made in the private canning kitchen operated under Frau Heyl's personal supervision and sold for 5 cents a pound.

When the correspondent called upon Frau Heyl in her "laboratory," meaning her kitchen, she was engaged in experimenting with the baffling "soya bean." She is convinced that there must be some way by which its essentially nutritious components can be converted into a palatable food product. Until recently it had been impossible to eliminate the bitter, oily taste and the residue of the bean, after the oil which supplies its chief commercial value, had been extracted, was used for fodder. Now there are mills in Germany, the largest of which is at Hamburg, where an exceedingly fine, powdery flour is milled, known as "aguma flour," from which all disagreeable properties have been successfully removed. Facing an unavoidable shortage of meat in Germany, Frau Heyl is experimenting with the object of making the soya bean or the flour from it a substitute for this staple.

"Its chief value as a food product lies in the large percentage of albumen it contains," she said. "One hundred grams of soya flour contains as much albumen as 200 grams of meat. Not only that, but it is extremely satisfying; a little of it goes a long way, so that it will form a cheap as well as nutritious article of food. Soya flour is now selling at 45 pfennigs a pound; the very cheapest meat, without bones, costs at present 1.50 marks a pound (and this may be expected to advance steadily in price), so that, multiplying this by two to make allowance for the double amount of albumen contained in soya, the result will be that the latter article costs just one-sixth as much as meat."

Frau Heyl relates with relish the story of a Hamburger Socialist, who, in a public welfare meeting, attacked her for recommending a certain sauce, to be made from the head and bones of fish. He said it was all "rubbish," and expressed the opinion that if such a dish ever was concocted it was eaten in the servants' dining room and not by Frau Heyl herself. Frau Heyl answered that the bones of fish contained the same nourishment and aromatic qualities as did those of flesh or fowl and that she had eaten it with relish.

In answer to reports that the "potato paring" campaign in Germany had been met with ridicule in foreign countries, Frau Heyl declared that wonders had been accomplished. Carts were sent around and in the poorer districts kindling was offered in exchange. The result was not only a much-needed increase in the food for pigs, but from the potato parings is obtained a certain amount of wood alcohol.

The latest economy is collecting cherry pits. A very good quality of table oil can be extracted from the seeds. Peach and apricot seeds furnish the German housewives with a substitute for bitter almond flavoring. But Frau Heyl's crowning achievement is the discovery that no fewer than 20 ordinary field plants—weeds, in other words—are edible, either in the form of salad or vegetables. Among them are sorrel, red pimpernel, yarrow, evening primrose, nettle and hops.

Where Frau Heyl is not personally known in Germany she has become famous through her series of "War Cook Books," which are compiled at the request of the German War Office and distributed gratis by the thousands to the remotest corner of the empire. These have made her an ex-officio member of the Home Office and she is invited to take part in all important conferences bearing upon household economics and the welfare of the proletarian classes. She has now in course of preparation a soya cookbook, containing, besides chemical analyses, 50 or more recipes for soups, vegetables and puddings to be compounded from soya flour.

Frau Heyl is the honorary president of the National Woman's Public Service League and of the National Union of German Housekeepers. She is the president of the Society for the Promotion of Woman's Economical Education, and of the Woman's Branch of the Colonial Society. She is charter member and president of the German Lyceum Club, which maintains a permanent exhibition of woman's work at the big department store of Wertheim; she is on the Executive Board of the Society of Women Hospital Physicians; of the local and national organizations of home nurses. She confesses that her pet philanthropy is the "Jugendheim," founded a quarter of a century ago, and of recent years housed in a new and commodious building in the Charlottenburg borough of Great Britain. This institution is far-famed. Here provision is made for every phase of children's education from the cradle to the training school, and 1000 children of indigent parents are fed every day. Frau Heyl gave a tremendous impulse to woman's work when, a few years ago, she conceived the idea of organizing the now historic exhibition called "Women at Home and in the Professions." This was universally acknowledged to be the most thoroughly organized and strikingly successful event of the kind ever attempted.

"Germany as a nation, and the Germans as individuals, have always prided themselves on being what you Americans call 'good managers,'" Frau Heyl declared. "We not only know how to make a little go a long way, but—and this is of more vital importance—we always lay by for a rainy day. The rainy day has now come—perhaps deluge would be a better figure—and the present state of affairs in Germany proves

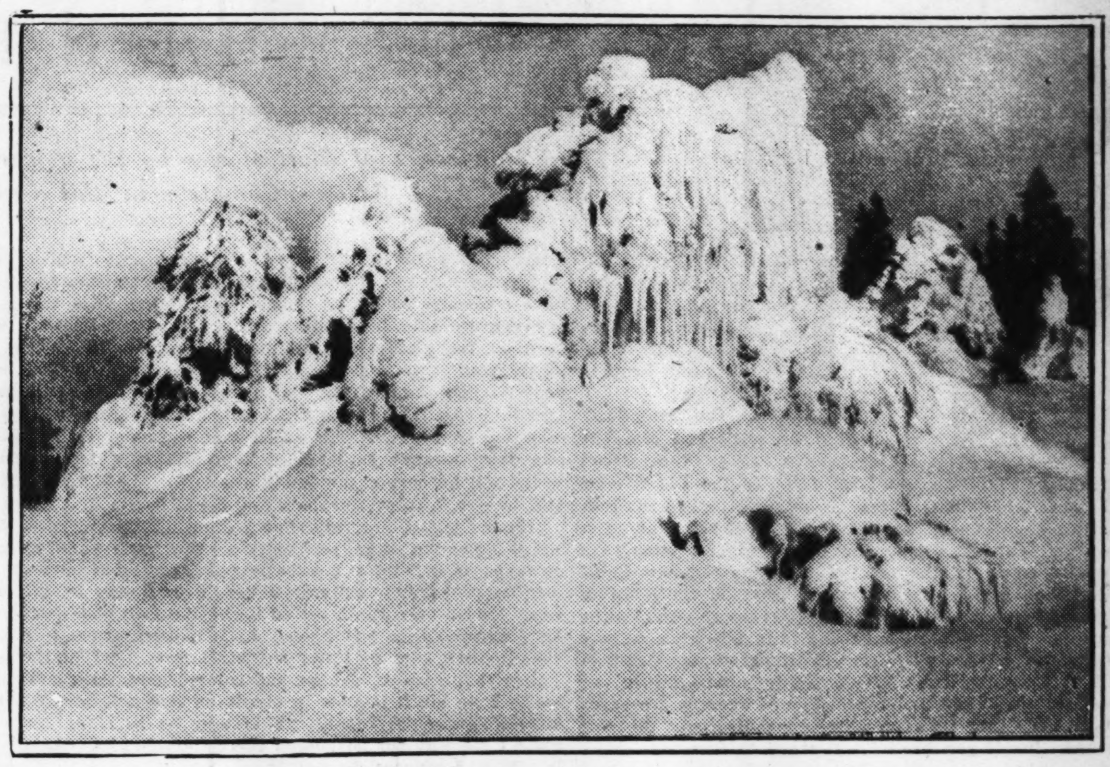
How Winter and the Need of Food Tames Wild Life in Yellowstone Park

Converted into a bleak, white wilderness by the piling snows, the great preserve is deserted except for a few soldiers and caretakers and it becomes necessary to scatter provender for the animals on trails and passes—One man's account of a trip on skis

PERHAPS the loneliest place in all America in winter is the Yellowstone National Park. After the first few snows its vast areas are deserted except for a few soldiers and caretakers—many of the big animals leave it. Before long most of its territory is impassible except with the aid of snow shoes or skis and it is little but a bleak white wilderness. Except for the forethought of Government officials who scatter food along trails and passes the beasts that remain would die of starvation.

The writer of the following has enjoyed the unusual experience of a tour through the park in mid-winter. He has combined a photographic record with the word picture of his experiences.

By O. J. Grimes.



Groups of pines covered with frozen vapor from the geysers give the appearance of massive marble buttes.

ALL nature lovers who have seen the natural phenomena in Yellowstone Park during the warm summer months there have felt the yearning for a glimpse of the great national playground in winter's embrace.

For years I had longed to see Yellowstone Park from the hurricane deck of a pair of skis. Each summer, as I wandered across the reservation in quest of new views and new experiences, all Nature, in the roar of the geysers and rush of cataracts, seemed to challenge a winter visit. My acceptance only abided my convenience.

A single pine, every limb, twig, scale and needle, hidden by frozen vapor.

Our little party of four started early in February from Gardiner, the northern gateway, because the park is easiest of access from there during the winter. One member of the party was a guide, without which it would be extremely hazardous to attempt the trip when the entire floor of the park is covered by a six to eight foot blanket of snow.

The eternal whiteness of things was blinding—almost maddening. The stillness of the wilderness was broken only by the roar of the geysers when we neared the various basins, the crackling of frozen timber, the occasional lonely howl of a coyote or the cries of scattering birds. Scenic wonders of the summer, except in areas immediately surrounding the boiling geysers or springs, were glaring, scintillating, misshapen masses. Even the timber wore a coat of snow and ice.

In fancy I had seen the verdant landscape of summer under the dominion of the Ice King, with waterfalls frozen and geysers hampered in their functions. I was disappointed only in the geysers: they made no distinction between summer and winter. But I had failed to anticipate the extent of the Storm King's hold.

Mammoth Hot Springs bubbled forth from banks of snow and clouded the atmosphere with vapor. They were not far different from what was expected. But as we approached Norris Geyser basin clouds of steam arose many times more dense than in summer. Subterranean heat kept the basin free from snow and the steam vents, the pools and the small geysers displayed their forms and functions exactly as they did in summer.

On the slopes around the basin, where in summer the siliceous formation is parched and hard, we encountered a slippery, plastic mass which clung to the feet like mortar. A general view of the basin was impossible on account of the volume of vapor that poured from every geyser, hot spring and fissure.

Geologists are agreed that Norris is the newest of the geyser basins. The hydrothermal activity there gains annually in area and potency. It was not surprising, therefore, to discover that the finest display was given by the so-called "cold-water geyser," the Valentine, which was first reported Feb. 14, 1910. It plays irregularly to a height of from fifty to one hundred feet in a slender, symmetrical column, not unlike the Beehive, which has been called the most beautiful geyser in the park.

At each eruption the preliminary upheavals of the Valentine are cold, but later the caloric elements gain the ascendancy and the final outpourings are highly heated. The boiling waters from all the other spouters flow off over the formations in winter as they do in summer. Not so with the Valentine. The cold waters from its discharges had congealed into a great mound of ice, which, glacier-like, surrounded the geyser's crater on three sides.

A winter keeper's cabin in Yellowstone Park.

In a quiescent period we entered the chamber of this cone from the open side and found ourselves in a fairyland of frozen forms. Icy nodules, singly and in clusters, simulating familiar sea forms, lined the walls and floor of the dell. It formed a marine garden where little imagination was required to discover coral, starfish, sea urchins, mollusks and other bits of sea life.

The most striking spectacle of the Norris basin was the pines, hoary with coatings of congealed steam from the geysers. All travelers through a mountainous country have seen the pines, snow-laden after a heavy fall. They were visible on every hand in the park. But the pines at Norris were different. With every trunk, limb, twig, scale and needle coated with frosted vapor they shimmered with the splendor of tinseled Christmas trees. Often several pines, bent under the loads of snow and ice, had embraced each other for common support. An icy snow covered the group, obliterating even the outlines of the trees and giving the whole a semblance of a massive marble butte which scintillated like millions of diamonds.

Beyond the border of the basin a forest of standing dead pines, white-coated, formed a labyrinth of glittering stalagmites. All in all, the Norris conglaciations formed the most weirdly beautiful spectacle I have ever seen.

Those who have toured Yellowstone will recall the neat frame and log soldier's stations at intervals along the highway. Often, in the summer time, when passing one of these cottages, I looked in on the squad lounging in the shade of the veranda, the atmosphere redolent of the aroma of cigarettes and rampant with vibrations from a phonograph, and thought that the picture deserved a place in the series of flaming posters employed by the War Department to lure recruits to the ranks.

Inexorable winter knocks all the poetry out of the summer station. Exertion, exposure and isolation abide with them for six interminable months. As the snow deepens horses give way to skis for police duty and the arduous daily patrols. And these patrols are extremely hazardous. In 1903, two troopers skiing across the face of a mountain, heard the ominous crackling of the snow above. One succeeded in reaching a place of safety, but the other was buried by the rush of the avalanche.

Troopers and scouts are not the only winter inhabitants of the park. At each hotel and at several of the permanent camps is a watchman or winter keeper. Some of these men live with their families, others keep cats and dogs. These keepers must enjoy their lonely existence, though, since some of them return for several successive winters. One caretaker is a voracious reader and his name may be found on the subscription lists of half a hundred monthly periodicals. Once each month he skis to Norris for his accumulation of some forty pounds of magazines. This journey is a little jaunt of 58 miles.

Herd of deer on a Yellowstone trail.

The Firehole Rapids was a streak of crystal water that looked black against snowy banks. Other streams were much the same, but none was frozen. Yellowstone Lake, however, was a glaring sheet of ice swept clean by frequent winds. Old Faithful belched forth its massive volume of steam and water at regular intervals of 65

Thimble, Thimble

By O. HENRY

Third of a series of short stories by the modern master of brief fiction—Complete in this issue

THESE are the directions for finding the office of Carteret & Carteret, Mill Supplies and Leather Belting:

You follow the Broadway trail down until you pass the Crosstown Line, the Bread Line, and the Dead Line, and come to the Big Canons of the Moneygrubber Tribe. Then you turn to the left, to the right, dodge a push-cart and the tongue of a two-ton, four-horse dray and hop, skip and jump to a granite ledge on the side of a 21-story mountain of stone and iron. In the twelfth story is the office of Carteret & Carteret. The factory where they make the mill supplies and leather belting is in Brooklyn. Those commodities—to say nothing of Brooklyn—not being of interest to you, let us hold the incidents within the confines of a one-act, one-scene play, thereby lessening the toil of the reader and the expenditure of the publisher. So, if you have the courage to face four pages of type and Carteret & Carteret's office boy, Percival, you shall sit on a varnished chair in the inner office and peer at the little comedy of the Old Nigger Man; the Hunting-Case Watch and the Open-Faced Question—mostly borrowed from the late Mr. Frank Stockton, as you will conclude.

First, biography (but pared to the quick) must intervene. I am for the inverted sugar-coated quinine pill—the bitter on the outside.

The Carterets were, or was (Columbia College professors please rule), an old Virginia family. Long time ago the gentlemen of the family had worn lace ruffles and carried tinless foils and owned plantations and had slaves to burn. But the war had greatly reduced their holdings. (Of course you can perceive at once that this flavor has been shoplifted from Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith, in spite of the "et" after "Carter.") Well, anyhow:

In digging up the Carteret history I shall not take you farther back than the year 1620. The two original American Carterets came over in that year, but by different means of transportation. One brother, named John, came in the Mayflower and became a Pilgrim Father. You've seen his picture on the covers of the Thanksgiving magazines, hunting turkeys in the deep snow with a blunderbuss. Blanford Carteret, the other brother, crossed the pond in his own brigantine, landed on the Virginia coast and became an F. F. V. Blandford became distinguished for his pride, juleps, marksmanship and vast slave-cultivated plantations.

Then came the Civil War. (I must condense this historical interpolation). Stonewall Jackson was shot; Lee surrendered; Grant toured the world; cotton went to nine cents; Old Crow whiskey and Jim Crow cars were invented; the Seventy-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers returned to the Ninety-seventh Alabama Zouaves the battle flag of Lundy's Lane which they bought at a second-hand store in Chelsea and kept by a man named Skzchnzski; Georgia sent the President a 60-pound watermelon—and that brings us up to the time when the story begins. My! but that was sparring for an opening! I really must brush up on my Aristotle.

The Yankee Carterets went into business in New York long before the war. Their house, as far as Leather Belting and Mill Supplies was concerned was a musty and arrogant and solid as one of those old East India tea-importing concerns that you read about in Dickens. There were some rumors of war behind its counters, but not enough to affect the business.

During and after the war, Blandford Carteret, F. F. V., lost his plantations, juleps, marksmanship and life. He bequeathed little more than his pride to his surviving family. So it came to pass that Blandford Carteret, the Fifth, aged 15, was invited by the leather-and-mill-supplies branch of that name to come north and learn business instead of hunting foxes and boasting of the glory of his fathers on the reduced acres of his impoverished family. The boy jumped at the chance; and, at the age of 25 sat in the office of the firm equal partner with John, the Fifth, of the blunderbuss-and-turkey branch. Here the story begins again.

The young men were about the same age, smooth of face, alert, easy of manner, and with an air that promised mental and physical quickness. They were razored, blue-serged, straw-hatted and pearl stick-pinned like other young New Yorkers who might be millionaires or bill clerks.

One afternoon at 4 o'clock, in the private office of the firm, Blandford Carteret opened a letter that a clerk had just brought to his desk. After reading it, he chuckled audibly for nearly a minute. John looked around from his desk inquiringly.

"It's from mother," said Blandford. "I'll read you the funny part of it. She tells me all the neighborhood news first, of course, and then cautions me against getting my feet wet and musical comedies. After that come vital statistics about calves and pigs and an estimate of the wheat crop. And now I'll quote some:

"'And what do you think! Old Uncle Jake, who was 76 last Wednesday, must go traveling. Nothing would do but he must go to New York and see his "young Marster Blandford." Old as he is, he has a deal of common sense, so I've let him go. I couldn't refuse him—he seems to have concentrated all his hopes and desires into this one venture into the wide world. You know he was born on the plantation, and has never been 10 miles away from it in his life. And he was your father's body servant during the war and has been always a faithful vassal and servant of the family. He has often seen the gold watch—the watch that was your father's and your father's father's. I told him it was to be yours and he begged me to allow him to take it to you and to put it into your hands himself.

"'So he has it, carefully inclosed in a buckskin case, and is bringing it to you with all the pride and importance of a king's messenger. I gave him money for the round trip and for a two weeks' stay in the city. I wish you would see to it that he gets comfortable quarters—Jake won't need much looking after—he's able to take care of himself. But I have read in the papers that African bishops and colored potentates generally have much trouble in obtaining food and lodging in the Yankee metropolis. That may be all right, but I don't see why the best hotel there shouldn't take Jake in. Still, I suppose it's a rule.

"'I gave him full directions about finding you, and packed his valise myself. You won't have to bother with him; but I do hope you'll see that he is made comfortable. Take the watch that he brings you—it's almost a decoration. It has been worn by true Carterets, and there isn't a stain upon it nor a false movement of the wheels. Bringing it to you is the crowning joy of old Jake's life. I wanted him to have that little outing and that happiness before it is too late. You have often heard us talk about how Jake, pretty badly wounded himself, crawled through the reddened grass at Chancellorsville to where your father lay with the bullet in his dear heart, and took the watch from his pocket to keep it from the "Yanks."

"'So, my son, when the old man comes consider him as a frail but worthy messenger from the old-time life and home.

"'You have been so long away from home and so long among the people that we have always regarded as aliens that I'm not sure that Jake will know you when he sees you. But Jake has a keen perception and I rather believe that he will know a Virginia Carteret at sight. I can't conceive that even 10 years in Yankeeland could change a boy of mine. Anyhow, I'm sure you will know Jake. I put 18 collars in his valise. If he should have to buy others, he wears a number 15½. Please see that he gets the right ones. He will be no trouble to you at all.

"'If you are not too busy, I'd like for you to find him a place to board where they have white-meal corn bread, and try to keep him from taking his shoes off in your office or on the street. His right foot swells a little, and he likes to be comfortable.

"'If you can spare the time, court his handkerchiefs when they come back from the wash. I bought him a dozen new ones before he left. He should be there about the time this letter reaches you. I told him to go straight to your office when he arrives.'"

As soon as Blandford had finished the reading of this, something happened (as there should happen in stories and must happen on the stage).

Percival, the office boy, with his air of despising the world's output of mill supplies and leather belting, came in to announce that a colored gentleman was outside to see Mr. Blandford Carteret.

"Bring him in," said Blandford, rising.

John Carteret swung around in his chair and said to Percival: "Ask him to wait a few minutes outside. We'll let you know when to bring him in."

Then he turned to his cousin with one of those broad, slow smiles that was an inheritance of all the Carterets, and said:

"Bland, I've always had a consuming curiosity to understand the differences that you haughty Southerners believe to exist between 'you all' and the people of the North. Of course, I know that you consider yourselves made out of finer clay and look upon Adam as only a collateral branch of your ancestry; but I don't know why. I never could understand the differences between us."

"Well, John," said Blandford, laughing, "what you don't understand about it is just the difference, of course. I suppose it was the feudal way in which we lived that gave us our lordly baronial airs and feeling of superiority."

"But you are not feudal now," went on John. "Since we licked you and stole your cotton and mules you've had to go to work just as we 'damyankees,' as you call us, have always been doing. And you're just as proud and exclusive and upper-classy as you were before the war. So it wasn't your money that caused it."

"Maybe it was the climate," said Blandford, lightly, "or maybe our negroes spoiled us. I'll call old Jake in now. I'll be glad to see the old villain again."

"Wait just a moment," said John "I've got a little theory I want to test. You and I are pretty much alike in our general appearance. Old Jake hasn't seen you since you were 15. Let's have him in and play fair and see which of us gets the watch. The old darkey surely ought to be able to pick out his 'young marster' without any trouble. The alleged aristocratic superiorty of a 'reb' ought to be visible to him at once. He couldn't make the mistake of handing over the timepiece to a Yankee, of course. The loser buys the dinner this evening and two dozen 15½ collars for Jake. Is it a go?"

Blandford agreed heartily. Percival was summoned and told to usher the "colored gentleman" in.

Uncle Jake stepped inside the private office cautiously. He was a little old man, as black as soot, wrinkled and bald except for a fringe of white wool, cut decorously short, that ran over his ears and around his head. There was nothing of the stage "uncle" about him; his black suit nearly fitted him; his shoes shone, and his straw hat was banded with a gaudy ribbon. In his right hand he carried something carefully concealed by his closed fingers.

Uncle Jake stopped a few steps from the door. Two young men sat in their revolving desk chairs 10 feet apart and looked at him in friendly silence. His gaze slowly shifted many times from one to the other. He felt sure that he was in the presence of one, at least, of the revered family among whose fortunes his life had begun and was to end.

One had the pleasing but haughty Carteret air; the other had the unmistakable straight, long family nose. Both had the keen black eyes, horizontal brows and thin, smiling lips that had distinguished both the Carteret of the Mayflower and him of the brigantine. Old Jake had thought that he could have picked out his young master instantly from a thousand Northerners: but he found himself in difficulties. The best he could do was to use strategy.

"Howdy, Marse Blandford—howdy, suh?" he said, looking midway between the two young men.

"Howdy, Uncle Jake?" they both answered pleasantly and in unison. "Sit down. Have you brought the watch?"

Uncle Jake chose a hard-bottom chair at a respectful distance, sat on the edge of it and laid his hat carefully on the floor. The watch in its buckskin case he gripped tightly. He had not risked his life on the battlefield to rescue that watch from his "old marster's" foes to hand it over again to the enemy without a struggle.

"Yes, suh; I got it in my hand, suh. I'm gwine give it to you right away in jus' a minute. Old Missus told me to put it in young Marse Blandford's hand and tell him to wear it for the family pride and honor. It was a mighty longsome trip for an old nigger man to make—ten thousand miles, it must be. back to Virginia, suh. You've growed mightily, young marster. I wouldn't have recognized you but for yo' resemblance to old marster."

With admirable diplomacy the old man kept his eyes roaming in the space between the two men. His words might have been addressed to either. Though neither wicked nor perverse, he was seeking for a sign.

Blandford and John exchanged winks.

"I reckon you done got you ma's letter?" went on Uncle Jake. "She said she was gwine to write to you 'bout my comin' along up this er-way."

"Yes, yes, Uncle Jake," said John briskly. "My cousin and I have just been notified to expect you. We are both Carterets, you know."

"Although one of us," said Blandford, "was born and raised in the North."

"So, if you will hand over the watch—" said John.

"My cousin and I—" said Blandford.

"Will then see to it—" said John.

"That comfortable quarters are found for you," said Blandford."

With incredible ingenuity old Jake set up a cackling, high-pitched, protracted laugh. He beat his knee, picked up his hat and bent the brim in an apparent paroxysm of humorous appreciation. The seizure afforded him a mask behind which he could roll his eyes impartially between, above and beyond his two tormentors.

"I sees what!" he chuckled, after a while. "You gen'lemen is tryin' to have fun with the po' old nigger. But you can't fool old Jake. I knowed you, Marse Blandford, the minute I sot eyes on you. You was a po' skimpy little boy no mo' than about fo'teen when you lef' home to come No'th; but I knowed you the minute I sot eyes on you. You is the mawtal image of old marster. The other gen'leman resembles yu mightily, suh; but you can't fool old Jake on a member of the old Vi'ginia family. No suh."

At exactly the same time both Carterets smiled and extended a hand for the watch.

Uncle Jake's wrinkled, black face lost the expression of amusement into which he had vainly twisted it. He knew that he was being teased, and that it made little real difference, as far as its safety went, into which of those outstretched hands he placed the family treasure. But it seemed to him that not only his own pride and loyalty but much of the Virginia Carterets' was at stake. He had heard down South during the war about that other branch of the family that lived in the North and fought on "the yuther side," and it had always grieved him. He had followed his "old master's" fortunes from stately luxury through war to almost poverty. And now, with the last relic and reminder of him, blessed by "old missus," and intrusted implicitly to his care, he had come ten thousand miles (as it seemed) to deliver it into the hands of the one who was to wear it and wind it and cherish it and listen to it tick off the unsullied hours that marked the lives of the Carterets—of Virginia.

His experience and conception of the Yankees had been an impression of tyrants — "low-down, common trash"—in blue, laying waste with fire and sword. He had seen the smoke of many burning homesteads almost as grand as Carteret Hall ascending to the drowsy Southern skies. And now he was face to face with one of them—and he could not distinguish him from his "young marster" whom he had come to find and bestow upon him the emblem of his kingship—even as the arm "clothed in white samite, mystic, wonderful" laid Excalibur in the right hand of Arthur. He saw before him two young men, easy, kind, courteous, welcoming, either of whom might have been the one he sought. Troubled, bewildered, sorely grieved at his weakness of judgment, old Jake abandoned his loyal subterfuges. His right hand sweated against the buckskin cover of the watch. He was deeply humiliated and chastened. Seriously, now, his prominent, yellow-white eyes closely scanned the two young men. At the end of his scrutiny he was conscious of but one difference between them. One wore a narrow black tie with a white pearl stickpin. The other's "four-in-hand" was a narrow blue one pinned with a black pearl.

And then, to old Jake's relief, there came a sudden distraction. Drama knocked at the door with imperious knuckles and forced Comedy to the wings, and Drama peeped with a smiling but set face over the footlights.

Percival, the hater of mill supplies, brought in a card, which he handed, with the manner of one bearing a cartel, Blue-Tie.

"'Olivia De Ormond,'" read Blue-Tie from the card. He looked inquiringly at his cousin.

"Why not have her in," said Black-Tie, "and bring matters to a conclusion?"

"Uncle Jake," said one of the young men, "would you mind taking that chair over there in the corner for a while? A lady is coming in—on some business. We'll take up your case afterward."

The lady whom Percival ushered in was young and petulantly, decidedly, freshly, consciously and intentionally pretty. She was dressed with such expensive plainness that she made you consider lace and ruffles as mere tatters and rags. But one great ostrich plume that she wore would have marked her anywhere in the army of beauty as the wearer of the merry helmet of Navarre.

Miss De Ormond accepted the swivel chair at Blue-Tie's desk. Then the gentlemen drew leather upholstered seats conveniently near, and spoke of the weather.

"Yes," she said, "I noticed it was warmer. But I mustn't take up too much of your time during business hours. That is," she continued, "unless we talk business."

She addressed her words to Blue-Tie, with a charming smile.

"Very well," said he. "You don't mind my cousin being present, do you? We are generally rather confidential with each other—especially in business matters."

"Oh, no," caroled Miss De Ormond. "I'd rather he did hear. He knows all about it, anyhow. In fact, he's quite a material witness, because he was present when you—when it happened. I thought you might want to talk things over before—well, before any action is taken, as I believe the lawyers say."

"Have you anything in the way of a proposition to make?" asked Black-Tie."

Miss De Ormond looked reflectively at the neat toe of one of her dull kid pumps.

"I had a proposal made to me," she said. "If the proposal sticks it cuts out the proposition. Let's have that settled first."

"Well, as far as—" began Blue-Tie.

"Excuse me, cousin," interrupted Black-Tie, "if you don't mind my cutting in." And then he turned, with a good-natured air, toward the lady.

"Now, let's recapitulate a bit," he said cheerfully. "All three of us, besides other mutual acquaintances, have been out on a good many larks together."

"I'm afraid I'll have to call the birds by another name," said Miss De Ormond.

"All right," responded Black-Tie, with unimpaired cheerfulness; "suppose we say 'squabs' when we talk about the 'proposal' and 'larks' when we discuss the 'proposition?' You have a quick mind, Miss De Ormond. Two months ago some half-dozen of us went in a motor car for a day's run into the country. We stopped at a road-house for dinner. My cousin proposed marriage to you then and there. He was influenced to do so, of course, by the beauty and charm which no one can deny that you possess."

"I wish I had you for a press agent, Mr. Carteret," said the beauty, with a dazzling smile.

"You are on the stage, Miss De Ormond," went on Black-Tie. "You have had, doubtless, many admirers, and, perhaps, other proposals. You must remember, too, that we were a party of merrymakers on that occasion. There were a good many corks pulled. That the proposal of marriage was made to you by my cousin we cannot deny. But hasn't it been your experience that, by common consent, such things lose their seriousness when viewed in the next day's sunlight? Isn't there something of a 'code' among good 'sports'—I use the word in its best sense—that wipes out each day the follies of the evening previous?"

"Oh, yes," said Miss De Ormond. "I know that very well. And I've always played up to it. But as you seem to be conducting the case—with the silent consent of the defendant—I'll tell you something more. I've got letters from him repeating the proposal. And they're signed, too."

"I understand," said Black-Tie, gravely. "What's your price for the letters?"

"I'm not a cheap one," said Miss De Ormond. "But I had decided to make you a rate. You both belong to a swell family. Well, if I am on the stage, nobody can say a word against me truthfully. And the money is only a secondary consideration. It isn't the money I was after. I—I believed him—and—and I liked him."

She cast a soft, entrancing glance at Blue-Tie from under her long eyelashes.

"And the price?" went on Black-Tie, inexorably.

"Ten thousand dollars," said the lady, sweetly.

"Or—"

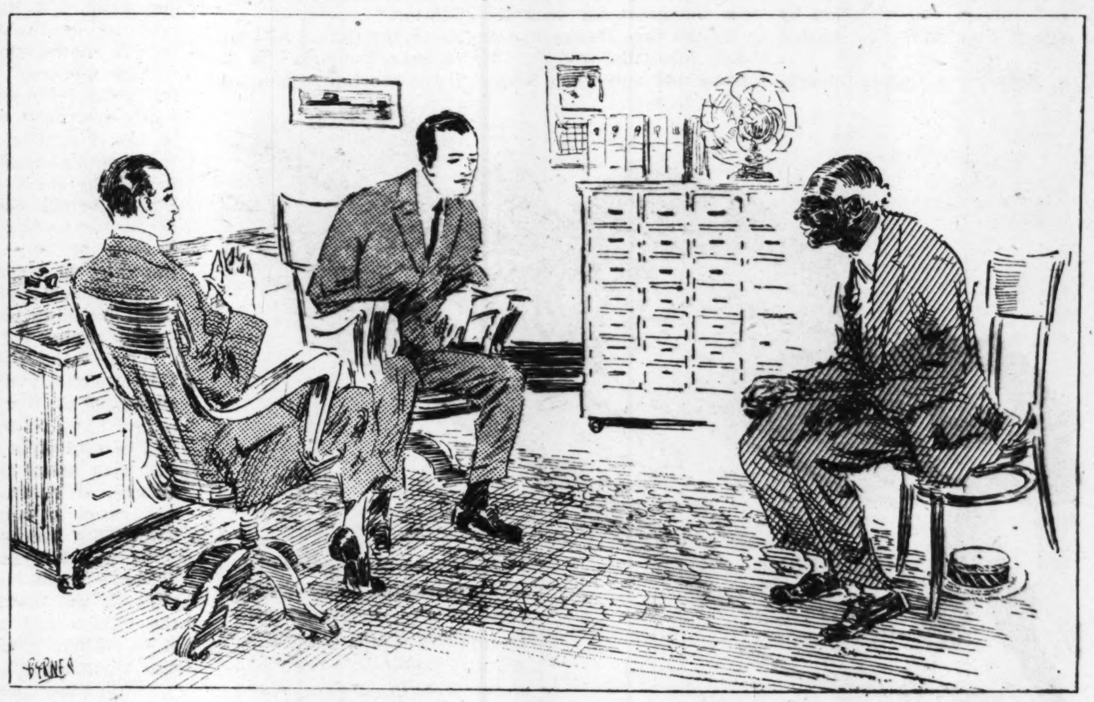
"Or the fulfillment of the engagement to marry."

"I think it is time," interrupted Blue-Tie, "for me to be allowed to say a word or two. You and I, cousin, belong to a family that has held its head pretty high. You have been brought up in a section of the country very different from the one where our branch of the family lived. Yet both of us are Carterets, even if some of our ways and theories differ. You remember, it is a tradition of the family, that no Carteret ever failed to keep his word when it was given."

Then Blue-Tie, with frank decision showing on his countenance, turned to Miss De Ormond.

"Olivia," said he, "on what date will you marry me?"

Before she could answer, Black-Tie again interposed.



"I reckon you done got you' ma's letter."

"It is a long journey," said he, "from Plymouth Rock to Norfolk Bay. Between the two points we find the changes that nearly three centuries have brought. In that time the old order has changed. We no longer burn witches or torture slaves. And today we neither spread our cloaks on the mud for ladies to walk over nor treat them to the ducking-pool. It is the age of common sense, adjustment and proportion. All of us—ladies, gentlemen, Northerners, Southerners, lords, caitiffs, actors, hardware drummers, Senators, hod-carriers and politicians—are coming to a better understanding. Chivalry is one of our words that changes its meaning every day. Family pride is a thing of many constructions—it may show itself by maintaining a moth-eaten arrogance in a cobwebbed colonial mansion or by the prompt paying of one's debts.

"Now, I suppose you've had enough of my monologue. I've learned something of business and a little of life; and I somehow believe, cousin, that our great-great-grandfathers, the original Carterets, would indorse my view of this matter."

Black-Tie wheeled around to his desk, wrote in a check-book and tore out the check, the sharp rasp of the perforated leaf making the only sound in the room. He laid the check within easy reach of Miss De Ormond's hand.

"Business is business," said he. "We live in a business age. There is my personal check for $10,000. What do you say, Miss De Ormond—will it be orange blossoms or cash?"

Miss De Ormond picked up the check carelessly, folded it indifferently, and stuffed it into her glove.

"Oh, this'll do," she said, calmly. "I just thought I'd call and put it up to you. I guess you people are right. But a girl has feelings, you know. I've heard one of you was a Southerner—I wonder which one of you it is?"

She arose, smiled sweetly and walked to the door. There, with a flash of white teeth and a dip of the heavy plume, she disappeared.

Both of the cousins had forgotten Uncle Jake for the time. But now they heard the shuffling of his shoes as he came across the rug toward them from his seat in the corner.

"Young marster," he said, "take yo' watch."

And without hesitation he laid the ancient timepiece in the hand of its rightful owner.

How Winter Tames Wild Life in Yellowstone Park

minutes, regardless of the season or the temperature.

As in summer, so in winter, the grand canyon of the Yellowstone River gave the scenic climax. As we threaded our way single file along the rim, a precarious footing and the imminence of snowslides sobered us. The only approach to a commanding promontory, Point Lookout, lay over a narrow ledge less than ten feet wide and covered to a depth of 15 feet by drifted snow. In summer the mighty walls of the canyon are bedecked in yellow, amber, purple, violet, red-brown, green—every hue, in fine, except pure blue. In winter the picture is a monochrome. The Joseph's coat is covered by a snowy shroud—the same maddening white. With its sheer walls and escarpments mantled in snow, and its points and pinnacles rounded and softened by prodigious drifts and slides, the great gorge looked for all the world like a deep, jagged gash in a gigantic block of Grecian marble—a mausoleum for all mankind.

At the head of the canyon the great falls of the Yellowstone were about three-fourths frozen. The falls have a vertical drop of 320 feet and the frozen mass hung like an inverted facade of a great cathedral. A single stalactite hung higher than the central tower of the great Mormon temple in Salt Lake City. Below the falls and spanning the river was an ice bridge not less than 100 feet high, formed by conglaciation of spray and vapor from the falls.

At the head of the gorge was the site of a permanent camp. On summer days a hundred happy tourists populate the pine-embowered tent city. With tents and furnishings stored and the ground buried beneath eight feet of snow, the place looked primitive save for the secluded cabins and storehouses, in one of which the caretaker lived.

We did not see, or expect to see in midwinter, any big game on the high plateaus of the park. The only cries that broke the monotony of the lonely trails were the yelps of coyotes, the chirp of the mountain bluebirds and the raucous call of the Canadian jay.

In summer, according to careful estimates, 30,000 elk, 5000 black-tailed and white-tailed deer and several hundred antelope and big horn make the valleys and uplands of Yellowstone Park their home. As autumn advances the animals leave the plateau and migrate to the south and the north. The largest bands move southward into the sheltered valleys of Wyoming, where a large number of them perish annually from starvation. Other bands move northward into the basins of the park and into Montana.

A band of about 300 antelope winters near Gardiner. These animals are fed alfalfa hay daily by the troopers. As the deepening snow increases their dependence on the daily ration the antelope, and many of the weaker elk and deer that join the band, become remarkably tame—so tame that it is possible to drive through the herd without moving them to flight.

By order of the superintendent of the park, hay also is scattered along the roadway from Gardiner to Fort Yellowstone, a distance of five miles, three times a week. Along this stretch of the highway we encountered hundreds of elk and numerous small bands of deer, antelope and Rocky Mountain sheep. Driven by the scourge of necessity to this common feeding ground, they ate with little more concern than domestic animals. Even the lordly ram, with horns in full turn, stood mild-eyed as we passed at not more than ten paces.

"But the tracks of the panther, too, were there, which we now took up and, aided by the blood, we soon came up to him lying stone dead in a bush. On examining the body I found my express bullet had struck him exactly in the center of the chest, smashing the heart and lungs to pieces. He measured just seven feet eight inches from tip of nose to end of tail, and was a stout, heavy beast, very different to the mangy, toothless creature which, according to the now exploded theory, all man-eaters were believed to be. This one was, in fact, exceptionally well nourished, thus proving that, odious as was the habit he had acquired, the diet he had taken to evidently agreed with him."

Man-eating tigers are almost extinct in India today, for hunters such as Davies have relentlessly hunted them down and exterminated them. There was a time, however, when they were numerous. At one time there was a mountainous pass on a well traveled road which was headquarters for several of these beasts. Sometimes passage over the road would be stopped for three months because of their ravages and one monster was declared by the natives to have killed and eaten 700 human beings before he was destroyed. The tigers would lie in wait in small hillocks above the road and pounce upon their victims.

Davies repeats a story of a Col. W——— who had an encounter with a man-eating tiger. He was encamped at Seonee station and was aroused at 5 one morning by a servant with the information that the man-eater had just attacked a driver and carried him into a jungle. The Colonel, together with the Superintendent of Police and a surgeon rode to the spot, five miles away.

A tigress and her cubs.

They found the broad track left by the beast as it dragged its prey through the jungle and later they came upon what was left of the body. It was nearly a year before the tiger was found and killed.

Davies declares it is folly to go hunting for dangerous game unless one is armed with a rifle of heavy bore. While smaller weapons will kill when a vital spot is reached, they will not disable enough to stop an animal unless the shot is unusually well placed. He recites one of his own narrow escapes as proof.

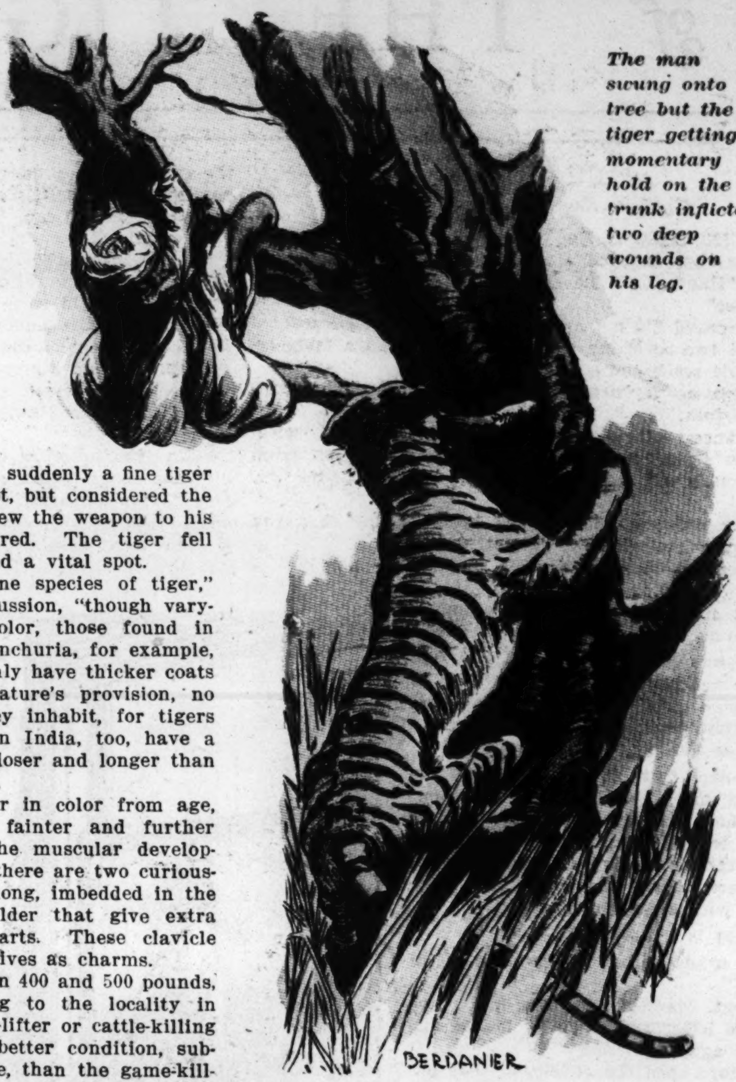
With a native boy he was out hunting deer one afternoon and, expecting to encounter nothing big, had only a small rifle and half a dozen cartridges. They were going through a ravine when they heard monkeys at the far end of it uttering their peculiar cry of alarm.

Thinking there might be a panther in the neighborhood, they advanced cautiously. "Crawling on hands and knees," runs the story, "we had almost reached the end of the ravine and I was searching the ground for tracks when the boy, catching me by the arm, pointed to some rocks above us. At the same moment I saw a large tiger picking his way leisurely among the boulders, about 20 yards to my front, and evidently quite unconscious of our presence.

"I fired at once, striking him in the ribs. Unfortunately my foot slipping at the moment on some stones prevented my swinging the rifle as far forward as I had intended, with the result that the bullet struck the animal a little too far back. Quickly pushing in another cartridge I fired again, smashing his forearm.

"This brought him rolling down the slope to within 10 yards of where we stood, but I now reserved my fire, for when we first saw the tiger I had only three cartridges left, having fired the rest at some chinkara. Meanwhile my small dog-boy, terrified out of his senses, had closed up to me for protection, for the tiger was now growling savagely and biting his injured leg in impotent rage as wounded tigers often do.

"Presently he sat up on his haunches like a huge dog and, looking in our direction, I knew at once that he had seen us. Drawing himself back, with body arched, ears laid flat, lips drawn up, exposing his long, white fangs, and eyes flashing fire, he fixed his gaze on us. This was certainly one of the most perilous situations I have been in, for truly the beast was an awe-inspiring spectacle and I felt my heart beating considerably quicker than its wont, as I thought of the light rifle in my hands and how ineffective it had shown itself to be.



The man swung onto a tree but the tiger getting a momentary hold on the trunk inflicted two deep wounds on his leg.

"Still I reserved my fire, expecting that every minute the brute would charge, when I intended to blaze in his face and trust to luck, but presently, and to my intense relief, he stood up and then, slowly retracing his steps over the rocks, disappeared from view."

Davies then sent the boy for his heavy rifle, followed the wounded beast and killed it.

Yet on another occasion Davies was beating for jungle sheep with only a small rifle when suddenly a fine tiger appeared. The hunter was on foot, but considered the chance too good to waste. He threw the weapon to his shoulder, aimed carefully and fired. The tiger fell stone dead. This bullet had found a vital spot.

"There is, as I believe, but one species of tiger," Davies remarks in a general discussion, "though varying a great deal in size and color, those found in Northern China and Korea or Manchuria, for example, being said to be larger and certainly have thicker coats than those of India. This is nature's provision, no doubt, for the colder climate they inhabit, for tigers killed during the cold weather in India, too, have a much richer coat, the fur being closer and longer than of those shot in the hot weather.

"Tigers in India become lighter in color from age, the stripes becoming narrower, fainter and further apart as their age increases. The muscular development of a tiger is enormous and there are two curiously bent bones, about four inches long, imbedded in the flesh and muscle of either shoulder that give extra strength and cohesion to the parts. These clavicle bones are much prized by the natives as charms.

"The weight of a tiger is between 400 and 500 pounds, but varies considerably according to the locality in which they are found. The cattle-lifter or cattle-killing tiger is usually heavier and in better condition, subsisting as it does chiefly on cattle, than the game-killing or hill tiger, which lives principally on game. and is usually a lighter and more active beast because of having to travel longer distances for its food. I have, however, killed very large hill tigers in jungles where such game as wild pig or sambar (deer) were plentiful.

"Of the numerous tigers I have shot none exceeded 10 feet 2 inches and I can only remember one of that length, shot in the Central Provinces. (This measurement is in a straight line from the tip of the nose to the tip of the ail.) The average age to which a tiger lives is, I believe, 20 years. It is always difficult to tell the age except by the size, faintness of the stripes and the discolored appearance of the teeth or fangs.

"In killing game the tiger invariably fixes its claws and teeth into the flesh to obtain the necessary purchase, then seizing the throat in his jaw from underneath, gives the fatal wrench which dislocates the neck, bearing down its victim by sheer weight. Human beings are invariably seized by the head or neck.

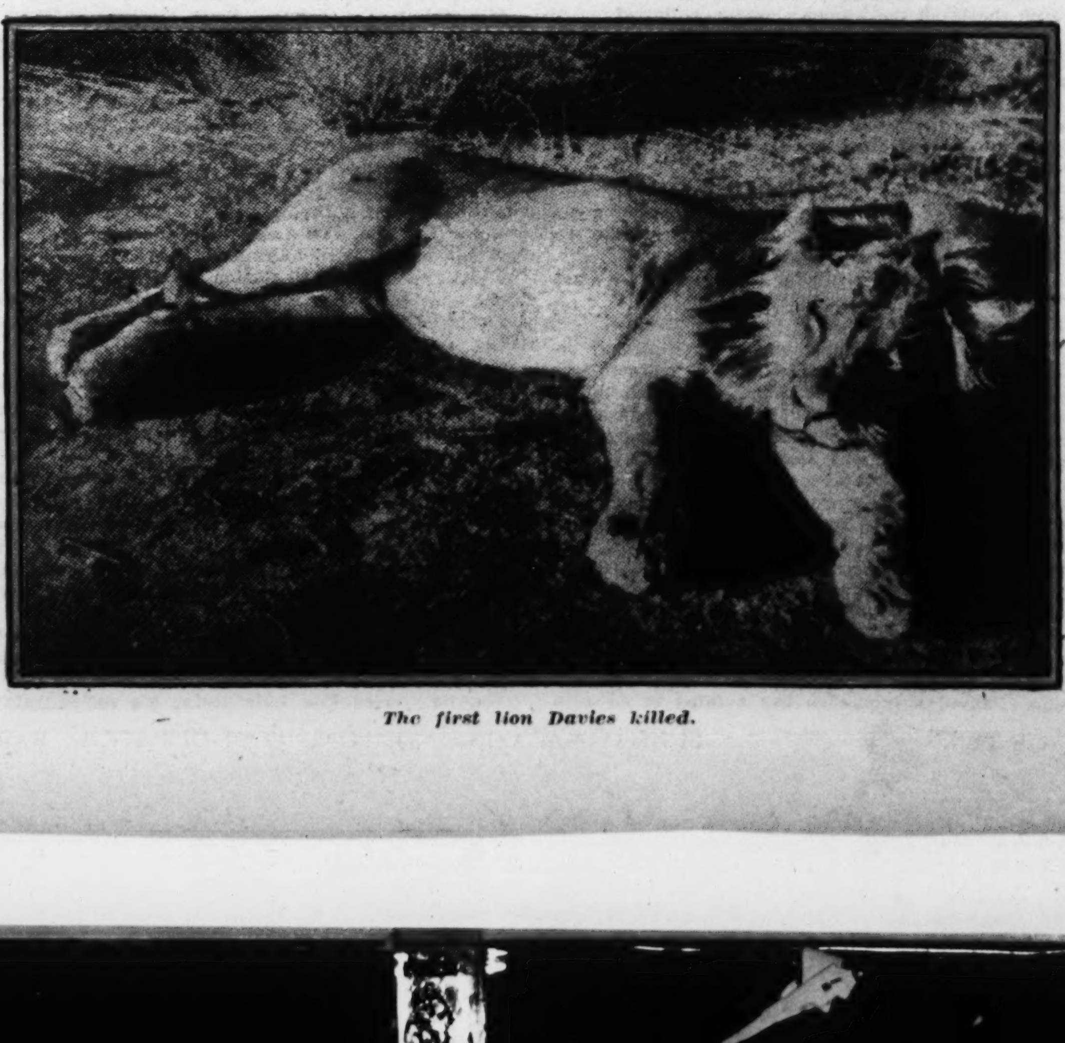
"Tigers are not necessarily nocturnal in their habits. They hunt by day as well as by night. I recall on one occasion tying up a young buffalo as bait for a tiger early in the afternoon. Shortly after we had left the spot we were startled by a roar and on returning we found a tiger had already killed the buffalo and dragged it into a nullah close by. Strangely enough we did not get that tiger although we beat for him twice.

"The attack of a tiger is terrific, as may be imagined of an animal of such vast muscular proportions, one of the most powerful elements in the attack being the startling, coughing roar with which it is invariably accompanied, a sound so intense in volume and ferocity as to be almost paralyzing to the coolest, and once heard can never be forgotten or mistaken for any other sound."

The lion, unless he is a man-eater, is a less dangerous animal to hunt than either the tiger or leopard, in the agent's opinion, being neither so cunning, ferocious nor agile. He also exposes himself more carelessly and is, thus, easier come upon. Indeed, his boldness in this respect is declared as quite remarkable when compared with the stealthy, skulking methods adopted by tigers on the hunt. The book tells how Davies shot several of them, but in none of the instances did he parallel some of his more thrilling experiences with the striped monarch of the Indian jungles.

Davies expresses regret that he has not kept an accurate account of all the tigers he has killed. When he was official slayer to the Bombay Government he had to make a weekly report and the total mentioned in the reports is a little more than 200. However, that does not include the animals he shot before he took the office or when he was away on leave of absence.

His biggest bag for a single year in Khandesh was 31, more than two a month, and his biggest bag for a week was six, one for each working day. He remembers one time when they were so plentiful that he actually got tired of hunting them. In many instances they were shot without any more effort on his part than holding his rifle straight. He always shot on foot or from a tree but even in these cases it was often necessary to follow a wounded beast to give it the coup de grace. Indeed, he insists upon it as a point of honor that no huntsman should leave a wounded beast in the woods unless it is humanly impossible to follow it up and put it out of its misery. Following a badly hurt tiger is not a very difficult task ordinarily, because it usually leaves a large trail of blood.



The first lion Davies killed.

THRILLING ADVENTURE LIFE OF INDIA'S OF

Appointed in his youth as agent among the Bhils, this Englishman has shot 250 tigers with his own rifle, not to mention lions, elephants and numerous leopards—His first "kill," his first accident and his most grewsome experience—How jungle beasts are driven by natives to where the armed huntsman lies in wait :: :: :: :: :: :: ::

THE man who held the most remarkable political job in the world, in many respects, has recently retired from active service. For fear this announcement may meet the eye of one of our American professional job-hunters and cause false hopes to rise, let it be added hastily that this is not the kind of job he's looking for and, besides, it is controlled by the Bombay (India) Government. The vacancy is in the position of Official Tiger Slayer for the Bhil district in India.

What perhaps will be incomprehensible to certain of our American patriots, who cannot conceive of any political job, however difficult the work, going around looking for a tenant, is the fact that there appears to be no candidate for the place. That, no doubt, is due largely to the energy of its last holder. Indeed, he performed his duties so industriously that all the tigers that haven't been exterminated have fled from the district. He committed the crime, politically speaking, of removing the job from further consideration by finishing it—killing the goose that laid the golden eggs, as it were.

The man is Digby Davies, formerly a Deputy Inspector-General of the Indian police. Throughout his many years of service he kept memoranda of his most important exploits and these notes have recently been compiled into a book—"Tiger Slayer by Order" (Chapman & Hall, Ltd., London)—by C. E. Gouldsbury, also formerly of the Indian police. It relates the real adventures of a real man in the ordinary routine of his employment.

Davies was a young man when he entered the Indian police service. Practically his first assignment was to the Bhil district. The Bhils are a primitive people, small, brown, sturdy jungle men, excellent trackers and hunters. Up to a few years ago their district was infested by tigers and even more ferocious leopards, or panthers, as Davies prefers to call them.

These animals had wrought so much damage, carrying off livestock, killing children and even adults, terrorizing whole neighborhoods, that the most important duty intrusted to the Bhil Agent was to rid the land of these pests. How far he succeeded may be gathered when it is related that 250 tigers fell to Davies' rifle alone, not counting those killed by others in hunting parties of which he was a member. Incidentally and by way of diversion, Davies once took a trip to Africa and killed eight lions and 30 elephants. Today the Bhil district is practically tigerless and leopardless.

It has been nearly 30 years since the young Englishman killed his first tiger, and yet so momentous was the experience that he declares he remembers it as vividly as if it were yesterday. The animal had been located in a jungle near Khandesh. Davies had taken post in a tree, rifle in his hand, and the Bhil shikaris or beaters had been sent out to start a drive.

Like nearly all wild animals, the tiger will not start a fight with human beings unless it comes to close quarters. He prefers to slip quietly away, when there are men around and avoid a contest. Thus it is comparatively easy to drive him in a given direction. All that is necessary is for men to get around in all directions—but at a reasonably safe distance—except in the one the tiger is to go, and to start making a racket. That was done in this case and the exciting parts of the episode are thus described:

"Each time the tiger had attempted to turn off to the right or left the stop posted nearest to the spot had succeeded in preventing it, either by tapping lightly with his stick upon a branch or by giving a low cough, these sounds, slight as they were, being quite sufficient for the animal's keen sense of hearing to detect.

"Perched on the branches of a tree, my rifle ready for use, I waited with bated breath for the animal to appear, and when it came out at last, the first tiger I had ever seen in its wild state, how anxiously I watched its every movement, wondering at its enormous muscular developments, extraordinary girth of limbs, especially notable in the forearm and wrist, its beautiful white beard and bristling whiskers, all so different to the long, lithe, skinny animals on which I had often gazed with such longing admiration in the zoo.

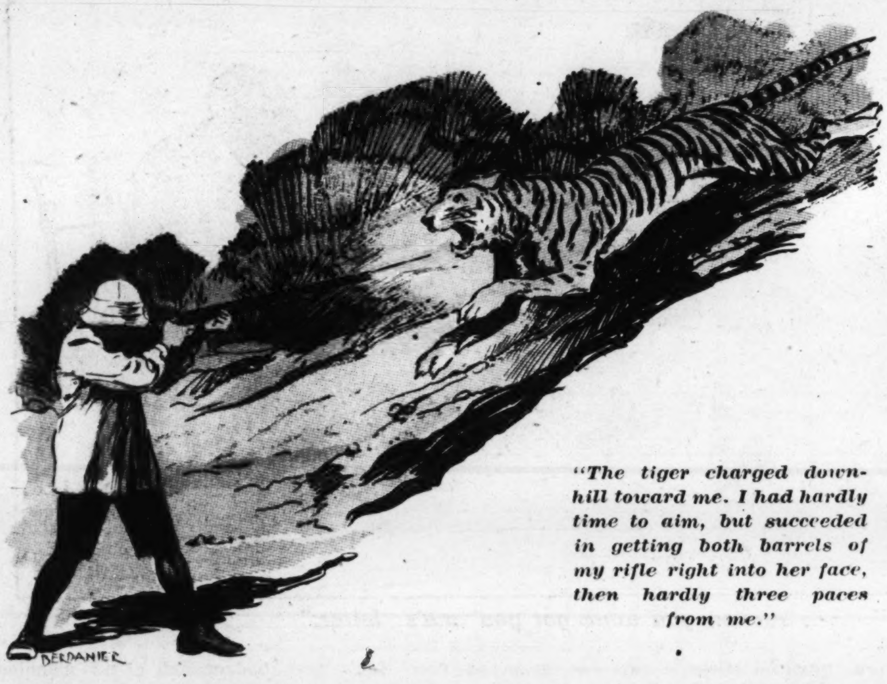
"He was driven up to within 100 yards of my machan (hiding place) and then, objecting to any further hustling, came charging past my post at racing speed. Waiting until I thought I had made certain of my shot, I fired, but, seemingly without effect, for the beast held on with undiminished speed, covering with each bound some 15 feet at least. Continuing at this pace for about 25 yards, he suddenly collapsed, falling into some brushwood, where we found him later, lying on his side—stone dead."

A short time after this affair, Davies and some natives were out hunting for wild sheep when they came upon the tracks of a tigress and two cubs. Mounting a tree, the agent told his beaters to drive the animal in that direction. As the drive progressed the tigress showed herself for an instant and then went into hiding in some green foliage.

"Making a signal to the beaters," the story runs, "I waited patiently. Presently one of the men, neglecting my instructions to keep well together, approached the spot alone from above and, throwing a stone into the foliage, was promptly charged by the tigress.

"He ran for some trees where his comrades had taken refuge, closely followed by the infuriated beast. Two more strides and she would have caught him up, but at this moment he had fortunately reached the tree and, seizing a branch, swung himself up. The tigress, however, by getting a momentary hold for her claws on the trunk, seized him by the leg, inflicting two deep wounds, but, luckily, the man held on, for had he loosed his grip nothing could have saved him. I had a perfect view of these proceedings from my tree, but the distance was too great for accurate shooting."

By the time Davies had got down the tigress had gone back into the foliage. He advanced boldly on her stronghold and when he got near, uttering a loud roar, she again rushed out. She gained the shelter of a large rock and disappeared. The next day she was again cornered and Davies gave the honor of the first shot to a visitor, who mortally wounded her.

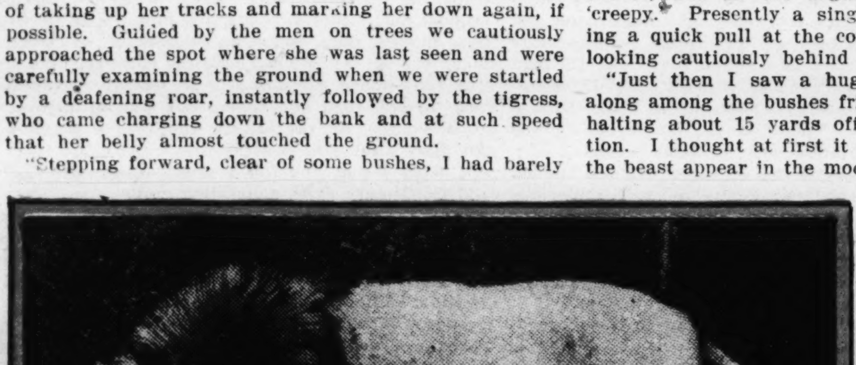


"The tiger charged downhill toward me. I had hardly time to aim, but succeeded in getting both barrels of my rifle right into her face, then hardly three paces from me."

His first serious accident when tiger hunting happened not long afterward. A tigress and some cubs had been located and, with beaters, Davies was closing upon them when one of the cubs broke cover and the agent killed it.

"I then left my tree and, accompanied by my two trusty shikaris," the narrative continues, "proceeded in the direction the tigress had gone, with the intention of taking up her tracks and marking her down again, if possible. Guided by the men on trees we cautiously approached the spot where she was last seen and were carefully examining the ground when we were startled by a deafening roar, instantly followed by the tigress, who came charging down the bank and at such speed that her belly almost touched the ground.

"Stepping forward, clear of some bushes, I had barely time to aim, but succeeded in getting off both barrels of my rifle right into her face, which was then hardly three paces from me. However, she managed to get home, and the next moment I was on my back, with the tigress standing over me growling savagely.



Black-maned lion of Eastern Africa.

"I remembered nothing more, but on coming to found myself surrounded by Bhils and my late antagonist dead at my feet—a fine, heavy beast, with a rich, dark skin. I now learned that on the tigress seizing me, Bapu (one of the shikaris) had most pluckily run in and shot her through the head, all this having been the work of a few seconds."

Davies had been badly hurt in the encounter, but he recovered under the skillful treatment of an army surgeon.

The Indian panther or leopard, m

Although the leopard or panther is a smaller animal than the tiger, it is often the more dangerous beast of the two to meet in combat, according to Davies. For one thing, it is at home in trees, whence it can pounce upon its unsuspecting prey. For another, it will seek trouble sooner and it more often becomes a man-eater.

"The leopard," says Davies, "is a far more dangerous animal for the hunter to encounter, as he is more easily provoked to anger and exceedingly courageous in his retaliation. I have been repeatedly charged by these animals and, on two occasions, have had my men mauled by them. When one happens to take to killing human beings he is far more to be dreaded than any other man-eating animal, and his victims may run to a score or two—sometimes many more. Though less imposing in respect of size than the tiger, it presents a handsomer appearance, possibly by reason of a more equal blending of the colors."

The hunter then tells this weird story:

"One of the worst examples of a man-eating panther I have come across was on one occasion when I was encamped at Wagra, a small Bhil hamlet, consisting of a few huts, in the Bharwana State. A large panther had carried off a child in broad daylight who was playing with other children within a stone's throw of the village. The same animal had also, it appeared, killed and eaten a woman collecting firewood a short time before, but her body was never found.

"It was late in the afternoon when I heard of the animal's latest victim and, going at once to the spot, I took up the tracks along a deep nullah which skirted the village and presently came upon the body of the child. There were the usual fang marks on the throat and a portion of the chest and abdomen had been eaten.

"After much persuasion the relatives of the dead child yielded to my request to leave the corpse where it lay, in order that I might sit up near it in the hope that the panther might return, when by shooting it I could, as I pointed out to them, rid the village of the pest.

"There was no suitable tree on which I could build a machan, so I concealed myself behind a bush, adding a few branches as a further protection, but so arranged that I could look through them. I decided to sit alone, as my Havildar-cum-Shikari (native stalker) though very keen to watch with me, had unfortunately a bad cough at the time and I was afraid lest an untimely paroxysm occurring, he should scare the beast away.

"It was a bright moonlight night, and the intense stillness of the jungle, plus the ghastly object over which I was watching, had a none too pleasing effect on my nerves, and as the night drew on I felt distinctly 'creepy.' Presently a single jackal appeared and, giving a quick pull at the corpse, as quickly slunk away, looking cautiously behind him.

"Just then I saw a huge panther coming stealthily along among the bushes fringing the nullah banks and, halting about 15 yards off, stood gazing in my direction. I thought at first it was a tiger, so enormous did the beast appear in the moonlight, and I was meditating whether to fire or let him come closer when he again crept forward and then stood facing me about five yards off.

"Now was my chance and, aiming very deliberately at his chest, I pulled the trigger slowly. Acknowledging the shot with a loud roar, he plunged into a thicket, where he now remained, although hidden from my sight.

"That he was hit I had no doubt, for presently there issued from the covert a succession of low groans, with an occasional deep, coughing sigh, and although I could not see him, I guessed from the sound that my bullet had done its work. My men, on hearing the report of the rifle, now came up with lighted torches, all keen to advance into the jungle, but I would not allow them to embark on such a dangerous task at night, for though almost convinced the beast was dead, the risk seemed too great.

"By the first streak of dawn we were up and on our way to the jungle where, on arrival, I was startled to find the corpse, or what remained of it, had disappeared. Could it be that I had missed the beast, after all, or that he had again returned to his kill and completed his dreadful feast? I hardly thought it possible, and yet it seemed unpleasantly like it. Happily, a closer examination proved to us that it was the hyenas and jackals who had been feasting, for the footprints of these animals were plainly visible all around.

THE TEETH of THE TIGER

New Adventures of Arsene Lupin

By MAURICE LeBLANC

CHAPTER X.

Gaston Sauverand Explains.

INSTINCTIVELY, Don Luis took a step back, drew his revolver, and aimed it at the criminal:

"Hands up!" he commanded. "Hands up, or I fire!"

Sauverand did not appear to be put out. He nodded toward two revolvers which he had laid on a table beyond his reach and said:

"There are my arms. I have come here not to fight, but to talk."

Florence ran into the room. She passed him by without his trying to stop her, flung herself upon Gaston Sauverand, and, taking no heed of Perenna's presence, said:

"Why did you come? You promised me that you wouldn't. You swore it to me. Go!"

Sauverand released himself and forced her into a chair.

"Let me be, Florence. I promised only so as to reassure you. Let me be."

She was silent, as though disarmed by the gentleness of his voice; and he whispered more words which Don Luis could not hear and which seemed to convince her.

Perenna took Sauverand's two revolvers and laid them in a drawer. Then he went back to the door, intending to lock it. But hearing a sound on the first-floor landing, he leant over the balusters. The butler was coming upstairs with a tray in his hand.

"What is it now?"

"An urgent letter, sir, for Sergt. Mazeroux."

"Sergt. Mazeroux is with me. Give me the letter and don't let me be disturbed again."

He tore open the envelope. The letter, hurriedly written in pencil and signed by one of the inspectors on duty outside the house, contained these words:

"Look out, Sergeant. Gaston Sauverand is in the house. Two people living opposite say that the girl who is known hereabouts as the lady housekeeper came in at half-past 1, before we took up our posts. She was next seen at the window of her lodge.

"A few moments after, a small, low door, used for the cellars and situated under the lodge, was opened, evidently by her. Almost at the same time a man entered the square, came along the wall, and slipped in through the cellar door. According to the description it was Gaston Sauverand. So look out, Sergeant. At the least alarm, at the first signal from you, we shall come in."

Don Luis reflected. He now understood how the scoundrel had access to his house, and how, hidden in the safest of retreats, he was able to escape every attempt to find him. He was living under the roof of the very man who had declared himself his most formidable adversary.

He shut the door, pushed the bolt, faced his two prisoners again and, taking a chair, said to Sauverand:

"Let us talk."

Owing to the narrow dimensions of the room they were all so close together that Don Luis felt as if he were almost touching the man whom he loathed from the very bottom of his heart. Their two chairs were hardly a yard asunder. A long table, covered with books, stood between them and the windows, which, hollowed out of the very thick wall, formed a recess, as is usual in old houses.

"Well? Speak!" said Don Luis, in a commanding tone. "I have agreed to a truce, but a momentary truce, just long enough to say what is necessary. Are you afraid now that the time has arrived? Do you regret the step which you have taken?"

The man smiled calmly and said:

"I am afraid of nothing, and I do not regret coming, for I have a very strong intuition that we can, that we are bound to, come to an understanding."

"An understanding!" protested Don Luis with a start.

"Why not?"

"A compact! An alliance between you and me!"

"Why not? It is a thought which I had already entertained more than once, which took a more precise shape in the magistrate's corridor, and which finally decided me when I read the announcement which you caused to be made in the special edition of this paper: 'Sensational declaration by Don Luis Perenna. Mme. Fauville is innocent!'"

Gaston Sauverand half rose from his chair and, carefully picking his words, emphasizing them with sharp gestures, he whispered:

"Everything lies, Monsieur, in those four words. Do those four words which you have written, which you have uttered publicly and solemnly—'Mme. Fauville is innocent'—do they express your real mind? Do you now absolutely believe in Marie Fauville's innocence?"

Don Luis shrugged his shoulders.

"Mme. Fauville's innocence has nothing to do with the case. It is a question not of her, but of you, of you two and myself. So come straight to the point and as quickly as you can. It is to your interest even more than to mine."

"To our interest?"

"You forget the third heading to the article," cried Don Luis. "I did more than proclaim Marie Fauville's innocence. I also announced—read for yourself— The 'imminent arrest of the criminals.'"

Sauverand and Florence rose together, with the same unguarded movement.

"And, in your view, the criminals are?"—— asked Sauverand.

"Why, you know as well as I do: they are the man with the ebony walking stick, who at any rate cannot deny having murdered Chief Inspector Ancenis, and the woman who is his accomplice in all his crimes. Both of them must remember their attempts to assassinate me: the revolver shot on the Boulevard Suchet; the motor smash causing the death of my chauffeur; and yesterday again, in the barn—you know where—the barn with the two skeletons hanging from the rafters: yesterday—you remember—the scythe, the relentless scythe, which nearly beheaded me."

"And then?"

"Well, then, the game is lost. You must pay up; and all the more so as you have foolishly put your heads into the lion's mouth."

"I don't understand. What does all this mean?"

"It simply means that they know Florence Levasseur, that they know you are both here, that the house is surrounded, and that Weber, the deputy chief detective, is on his way."

Sauverand appeared disconcerted by this unexpected threat. Florence, standing beside him, had turned livid. A mad anguish distorted her features.

"Very well," said Sauverand. "I am caught in a trap. Fate must take its course. Nevertheless, can I speak to you? It is the only wish that remains to me."

"Speak," replied Don Luis. "The door is locked. I shall not open it until I think fit."

"I shall be brief," said Gaston Sauverand. "For one thing, what I can tell you is not much. I do not ask you to believe it, but to listen to it as if I were possibly telling the truth, the whole truth."

And he expressed himself in the following words:

"I never met Hippolyte and Marie Fauville, though I used to correspond with them—you will remember that we were all cousins—until five years ago, when chance brought us together at Palermo. They were passing the winter there while their new house on the Boulevard Suchet was being built.

"We spent five months at Palermo, seeing one another daily. Hippolyte and Marie were not on the best of terms. One evening after they had been quarreling more violently than usual I found her crying. Her tears upset me and I could not longer conceal my secret. I had loved Marie from the first moment when we met. I was to love her always and to love her more and more."

"You lie!" cried Don Luis, losing his self-restraint. "I saw the two of you yesterday in the train that brought you back from Alencon"——

Gaston Sauverand looked at Florence. She sat silent, with her hands to her face and her elbows on her knees. Without replying to Don Luis' exclamation, he went on:

"Marie also loved me. She admitted it, but made me swear that I would never try to obtain from her more than the purest friendship would allow. I kept my oath. We enjoyed a few weeks of incomparable happiness. Hippolyte Fauville, who had become enamoured of a music hall singer, was often away.

"I took a good deal of trouble with the physical training of the little boy Edmond, whose health was not what it should be. And we also had with us, between us, the best friend, the most devoted and affectionate counsellor, who staunched our wounds, kept up our courage, restored our gayety, and bestowed some of her own strength and dignity upon our love. Florence was there."

Don Luis felt his heart beating faster. Not that he attached the least credit to Gaston Sauverand's words; but he had every hope of arriving, through those words, at the real truth.

Sauverand continued:

"Fifteen years before, my elder brother Raoul Sauverand, had picked up at Buenos Aires, where he had gone to live, a little girl, the orphan daughter of some friends. At his death he entrusted the child, who was then 14, to an old nurse who had brought me up and who had accompanied my brother to South America. The old nurse brought the child to me and herself died of an accident a few days after her arrival in France. * * * I took the little girl to Italy to friends, where she worked and studied and became—what she is.

"Wishing to live by her own resources, she accepted a position as teacher in a family. Later I recommended her to my Fauville cousins with whom I found her at Palermo as governess to the boy Edmond and especially as the friend, and dear and devoted friend, of Marie Fauville. * * * She was mine, also, at that happy time, which was so sunny and all too short. Our happiness, in fact—the happiness of all three of us—was to be wrecked in the most sudden and tantalizing fashion.

"Every evening I used to write in a diary the daily life of my love, an uneventful life, without hope or future before it, but eager and radiant. Marie Fauville was extolled in it as a goddess. Kneeling down to write I sang litanies of her beauty, and I also used to invent, as a poor compensation, wholly imaginary scenes, in which she said all the things which she might have said but did not, and promised me all the happiness which we had voluntarily renounced.

"Hippolyte Fauville found the diary. * * * His anger was something terrible. His first impulse was to get rid of Marie. But in the face of his wife's attitude, of the proofs of her innocence which she supplied, of her inflexible refusal to consent to a divorce, and of her promise never to see me again, he recovered his calmness. * * * I left, with death in my soul. Florence left, too, dismissed. And never, mark me, never, since that fatal hour, did I exchange a single word with Marie. But an indestructible love united us, a love which neither absence nor time was to weaken."

He stopped for a moment, as though to read in Don Luis' face the effect produced by his story. Don Luis did not conceal his anxious attention.

He asked:

"And afterward?"

"Afterward I traveled about. I resumed my life of work and pursued my studies wherever I went, in my bedroom at the hotels, and in the public laboratories of the big towns."

"And Mme. Fauville?"

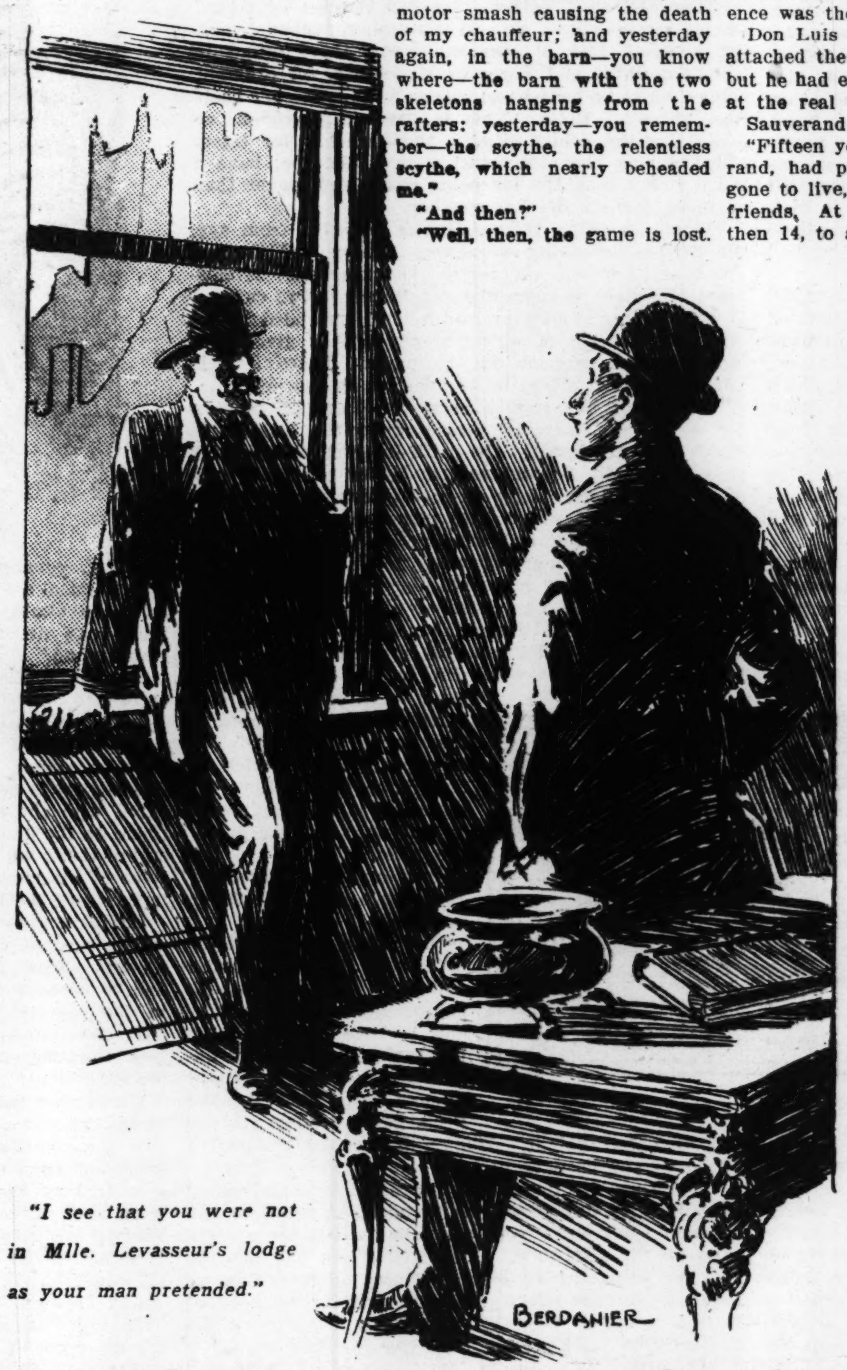
"She lived in Paris in her new house. Neither she nor her husband ever referred to the past."

"How do you know? Did she write to you?"

"No. Marie is a woman who does not do her duty by halves; and her sense of duty is strict to excess. She never wrote to me. But Florence, who had accepted a place as secretary and reader to Count Malonyi, your predecessor in this house, used often to receive Marie's visits in her lodge downstairs.

"They did not speak of me once, did they, Florence? Marie would not have allowed it. But all her life and all her soul were nothing but love and passionate memories. Isn't that so, Florence?

"At last," he went on slowly, "weary of being so far away from her, I returned to Paris. That was our undoing. * * * It was about a year ago. I took a flat in the Avenue du Roule and went to it in the greatest secrecy, so that Hippolyte Fauville might not know of my return. I was afraid of disturbing Marie's peace of mind. Florence alone knew, and came to see me from time to time. I went out little, only after dark, and in the most secluded parts of the Bois. But it happened—for our most heroic resolutions sometimes fail us—one Wednesday night, at about 11 o'clock, my steps



"I see that you were not in Mlle. Levasseur's lodge as your man pretended."

led me to the Boulevard Suchet, without my noticing it, and I went past Marie's house.

"It was a warm and fine night and, as luck would have it. Marie was at her window. She saw me, I was sure of it, and knew me; and my happiness was so great that my legs shook under me as I walked away.

"After that I passed in front of her house every Wednesday evening; and Marie was nearly always there, giving me this unhoped-for and ever-new delight, in spite of the fact that her social duties, her quite natural love of amusement, and her husband's position obliged her to go out a great deal."

"Quick! Why can't you hurry?" said Don Luis, urged by his longing to know more. "Look sharp and come to the facts. Speak!"

Sauverand shook his head.

"I shall not hurry. All my words were carefully thought out before I decided to speak. Every one of them is essential. Not one of them can be omitted, for you will find the solution of the problem not in facts presented anyhow, separated one from the other, but in the concatenation of the facts, and in a story told as faithfully as possible."

"Why? I don't understand."

"Because the truth lies hidden in that story."

"But that truth is your innocence, isn't it?"

"It is Marie's innocence."

"But I don't dispute it!"

"What is the use of that if you can't prove it?"

"Exactly! It's for you to give me proofs."

"I have none."

"What!"

"I tell you, I have no proof of what I am asking you to believe."

"Then I shall not believe it!" cried Don Luis angrily. "No, and again no! Unless you supply me with the most convincing proofs, I shall refuse to believe a single word of what you are going to tell me."

"You have believed everything that I have told you so far," Sauverand retorted very simply.

Don Luis offered no denial. He turned his eyes to Florence Levasseur; and it seemed to him that she was looking at him with less aversion, and as though she were wishing with all her might that he would not resist the impressions that were forcing themselves upon him.

"We are coming," said Sauverand, in his grave voice, "we are coming to the most important events, to those of which the interpretation, which is new to you, but strictly true, will make you believe in our good faith. Ill luck having brought me across Hippolyte Fauville's path in the course of one of my walks in the Bois, I took the precaution of changing my abode and went to live in the little house on the Boulevard Richard-Wallace, where Florence came to see me several times.

"I was even careful to keep her visits a secret and, moreover, to refrain from corresponding with her except through the poste restante. I was therefore quite easy in my mind.

"I worked in perfect solitude and in complete security. I expected nothing. No danger, no possibility of danger, threatened us. And, I may say, to use a commonplace but very accurate expression, that what happened came as an absolute bolt from the blue. When the Prefect of Police and his men broke into the house and proceeded to arrest me, I heard at the same time and for the first time of the murder of Hippolyte Fauville, the murder of Edmond, and the arrest of my adored Marie."

"Impossible!" cried Don Luis, in a renewed tone of aggressive wrath. "Impossible! Those facts were a fortnight old. I cannot allow that you had not heard of them."

"Through whom?"

"Through the papers," exclaimed Don Luis. "And, more certainly still, through Mlle. Levasseur."

"Through the papers?" said Sauverand. "I never used to read them. What! Is that incredible? Are we under an obligation, an inevitable necessity, to waste half an hour a day in skimming through the futilities of politics and the piffle of the news columns? Is your imagination incapable of conceiving a man who reads nothing but reviews and scientific publications?

"The fact is rare, I admit," he continued. "But the rarity of a fact is no proof against it. On the other hand, on the very morning of the crime I had written to Florence saying that I was going away for three weeks and bidding her good-by. I changed my mind at the last moment; but this she did not know; and, thinking that I had gone, not knowing where I was, she was unable to inform me of the crime, of Marie's arrest, or, later, when an accusation was brought against the man with the ebony walking-stick, of the search that was being made for me."

"Exactly!" declared Don Luis. "You cannot pretend that the man with the ebony walking stick, the man who followed Inspector Verot to the Cafe du Pont-Neuf and purloined his letter"——

"I am not the man," Sauverand interrupted.

And, when Don Luis shrugged his shoulders, he insisted, in a more forcible tone of voice:

"I am not that man. There is some inexplicable mistake in all this, but I have never set foot in the Cafe du Pont-Neuf. I swear it. You must accept this statement as positively true. Besides, it agrees entirely with the retired life which I was leading from necessity and from choice. And, I repeat, I knew nothing.

"The thunderbolt was unexpected. And it was precisely for this reason, you must understand, that the shock produced in me an equally unexpected reaction, a state of mind diametrically opposed to my real nature, an outburst of my most savage and primitive instincts. Remember, Monsieur, that they had laid hands upon what to me was the most sacred thing on earth. Marie was in prison. Marie was accused of committing two murders! * * * I went mad.

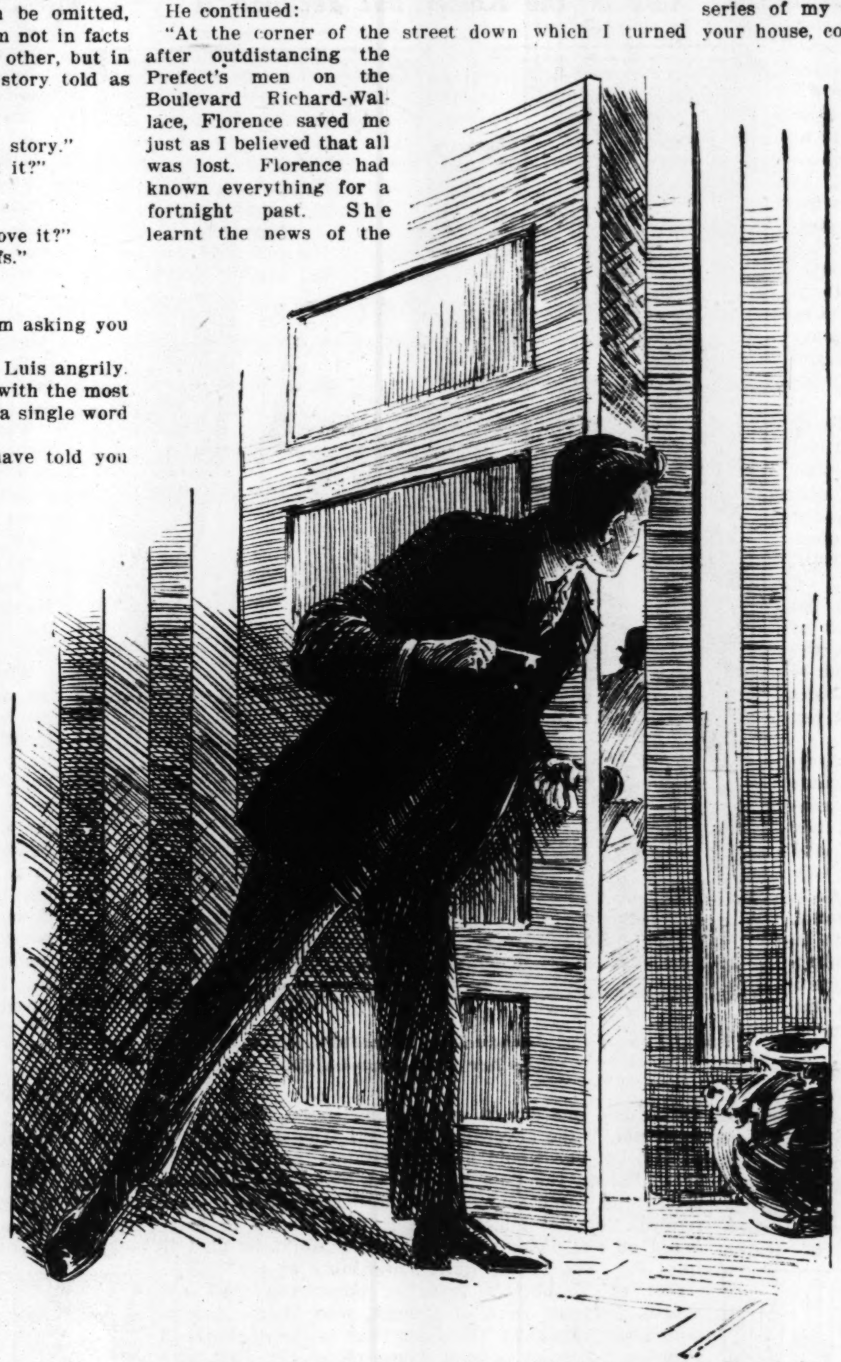
"At first controlling myself, playing a part with the Prefect of Police, then overthrowing every obstacle, shooting Chief Inspector Ancenis, shaking off Sergt. Mazeroux, jumping from the window, I had only one thought in my head—that of escape. Once free, I should save Marie. Were there people in my way? So much the worse for them.

"By what right did those people dare to attack the most blameless of women? I killed only one man that day! I would have killed 10! I would have killed 20! What was Chief Inspector Ancenis' life to me? What cared I for the lives of any of those wretches? They stood between Marie and myself; and Marie was in prison!"

Gaston Sauverand made an effort which contracted every muscle of his face to recover the coolness that was gradually leaving him. He succeeded in doing so, but his voice, nevertheless, remained tremulous, and the fever with which he was consumed shook his frame in a manner which he was unable to conceal.

He continued:

"At the corner of the street down which I turned after outdistancing the Prefect's men on the Boulevard Richard-Wallace, Florence saved me just as I believed that all was lost. Florence had known everything for a fortnight past. She learnt the news of the double murder from the papers, those papers which she used to read out to you, and which you discussed with her. And it was by being with you, by listening to you, that she acquired the opinion which everything that happened tended to confirm: the opinion that Marie's enemy, her only enemy, was yourself."



When the last of them had vanished round the bend of the passage, Don Luis softly pushed the door that concealed him and locked it like the rest.

"But why? Why?"

"Because she saw you at work," exclaimed Sauverand, "because it was more to your interest than to that of any one else that first Marie and then I should not come between you and the Mornington inheritance, and lastly"——

"What?"

Gaston Sauverand hesitated and then said, plainly:

"Lastly, because she knew your real name beyond a doubt, and because she felt that Arsene Lupin was capable of anything."

They were both silent; and their silence, at such a moment, was impressive to a degree. Florence remained impassive under Don Luis Perenna's gaze; and he was unable to discern on her sealed face any of the feelings with which she must needs be stirred.

"It was against Arsene Lupin, therefore, that Florence, Marie's terrified friend, engaged in the struggle. It was to unmask Lupin that she wrote or rather inspired the article of which you found the original in a ball of string. It was Lupin whom she spied upon, day by day, in this house. It was Lupin whom she heard one morning telephoning to Sergt. Mazeroux and rejoicing in my imminent arrest. It was to save me from Lupin that she let down the iron curtain in front of him, at the risk of an accident, and took a taxi to the corner of the Boulevard Richard-Wallace, where she arrived too late to warn me, as the detectives had already entered my house, but in time to screen me from their pursuit.

"Her mistrust and terror-stricken hatred of you were told to me in an instant," Sauverand declared. "During the 20 minutes which we employed in throwing our assailants off the scent, she hurriedly sketched the main lines of the business and described to me in a few words the leading part which you were playing in it; and we then and there prepared a counter-attack upon you, so that you might be suspected of complicity.

"While I was sending a message to the Prefect of Police, Florence went home and hid under the cushions of your sofa the end of the stick which I had kept in my hand without thinking. It was an ineffective parry and missed its aim. But the fight had begun; and I threw myself into it headlong.

"Monsieur, to understand my actions thoroughly, you must remember that I was a student, a man leading a solitary life, but also an ardent lover. I would have spent all my life in work, asking no more from fate than to see Marie at her window from time to time at night. But, once she was being persecuted, another man arose within me, a man of action, bungling, certainly, and inexperienced, but a man who was ready to stick at nothing, and who, not knowing how to save Marie Fauville, had no other object before him than to do away with that enemy of Marie's to whom he was entitled to ascribe all the misfortunes that had befallen the woman he loved. * * * This started the series of my attempts upon your life. Brought into your house, concealed in Florence's own rooms, I tried—unknown to her: that I swear—to poison you."

He paused for an instant to mark the effect of his words, then went on:

"Her reproaches, her abhorrence of such an act, would perhaps have moved me, but, I repeat, I was mad, quite mad; and your death seemed to me to imply Marie's safety. And, one morning, on the Boulevard Suchet, where I had followed you, I fired a revolver at you.

"The same evening your motor car, tampered with by myself—remember, Florence's rooms are close to the garage—carried you, I hoped, to your death, together with Sergt. Mazeroux, your confederate. * * * That time again you escaped my vengeance. But an innocent man, the chauffeur who drove you, paid for you with his life; and Florence's despair was such that I had to yield to her entreaties and lay down my arms.

"I myself, terrified by what I had done, shattered by the remembrance of my two victims, changed my plans and thought only of saving Marie by contriving her escape from prison.

"I am a rich man. I lavished money upon Marie's warders, without, however, revealing my intentions. I entered into relations with the prison tradesmen and the staff of the infirmary. And every day, having procured a card of admission as a law reporter, I went to the law courts, to the examining magistrate's corridor, where I hoped to meet Marie, to encourage her with a look, a gesture, perhaps to slip a few words of comfort into her hand."

Sauverand moved closer to Don Luis.

"Her martyrdom continued. You struck her a most terrible blow with that mysterious business of Hippolyte Fauville's letters. What did those letters mean? Where did they come from? Were we not entitled to attribute the whole plot to you, to you who introduced them into the horrible struggle?

"Florence watched you, I may say, night and day. We sought for a clew, a glimmer of light in the darkness. * * * Well, yesterday morning, Florence saw Sergt. Mazeroux arrive. She could not overhear what he said to you, but she caught the name of a certain Langernault and the name of Damigni, the village where Langernault lived. She remembered that old friend of Hippolyte Fauville's. Were the letters not addressed to him and was it not in search of him that you were going off in the motor with Sergt. Mazeroux? * * *

"Half an hour later we were in the train for Alencon. A carriage took us from the station to just outside Damigni, where we made our inquiries with every possible precaution. On learning what you must also know, that Langernault was dead, we resolved to visit his place, and we had succeeded in effecting an entrance when Florence saw you in the grounds. Wishing at all costs to avoid a meeting between you and myself, she dragged me across the lawn and behind the bushes. You followed us, however, and when a barn appeared in sight she pushed one of the doors which half opened and let us through. We managed to slip quickly through the lumber in the dark and knocked up against a ladder. This we climbed and reached a loft in which we took shelter. You entered at that moment. * * *

"You know the rest: how you discovered the two hanging skeletons; how your attention was drawn to us by an imprudent movement of Florence; your attack, to which I replied by brandishing the first weapon with which chance provided me; lastly, our flight through the window in the roof, under the fire of your revolver. We were free. But in the evening, in the train, Florence fainted. While bringing her to I perceived that one of your bullets had wounded her in the shoulder. The would was slight and did not hurt her, but it was enough to increase the extreme tension of her nerves. When you saw us—at Le Mans station, wasn't it?—she was asleep, with her head on my shoulder."

Don Luis had not once interrupted the latter part of this narrative, which was told in a more and more agitated voice and quickened by an accent of profound truth. Thanks to a superhuman effort of attention, he noted Sauverand's least words and actions in his mind. And as these words were uttered and these actions performed, he received the impression of another woman who rose up beside the real Florence, a woman unspotted and innocent of all the shame which he had attributed to her on the strength of events.

Nevertheless, he did not yet give in. He would not admit that Florence could suddenly be different from

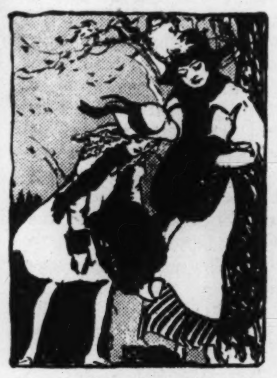
TOLD BY HER GOVERNESS



The Archduchess brought the cat home and fed it.

Englishwoman who for three years was companion to granddaughter of Emperor Franz-Josef, writes book about her life in the court of the Hapsburgs—Humorous stories of the adventures and pranks of a petted child of royalty, who had an opportunity to become the daughter-in-law of the Kaiser but declined it

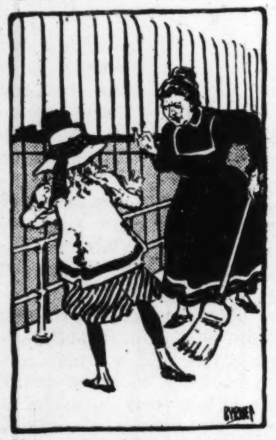
AN English woman employed as governess in the royal household of Austria! An impossible situation now, to be sure, but for three years a subject of the British crown had her residence in the imperial palace at Vienna while serving as instructor and companion to the Archduchess Elizabeth, granddaughter of Emperor Franz-Josef and daughter of the Crown Prince Rudolph, whose mysterious and tragic death was one of the many shadows over the long reign of Austria's unhappy ruler.

Now, when the Austrians and their allies are engaged in a death grapple with her countrymen, and when reports of the aged Austrian Emperor's mortal illness are current almost daily, the former governess has recalled those happier days in a contribution to that class of literature which gives the proletariat the only intimacy it is possible for him to obtain with the men and women who make up the ruling houses of Europe.

Prior to accepting service in the family of Franz-Josef, the author was companion-governess to Wanda, daughter of Count Badeni, at that time Governor of Galicia, but later Prime Minister of Austria, whose early death was hastened by his bitter fight in the Austrian Parliament with the German party, which finally brought about his downfall. She was also a warm friend of Mme. Josephine Merry del Val, wife of the Spanish Ambassador to Rome, and mother of Cardinal Merry del Val, papal secretary at the Vitican. Throughout the book, "Recollections of a Royal Governess" (D. Appleton & Co.), she conceals her identity, except to reveal that her first name is May.

The Governess' introduction to the Archduchess Elizabeth, then a girl of 12 years, came on Sept. 1, 1895, at the Royal Palace at Laxenburg. She describes her as a tall, slight, fair and extremely pretty girl, with a dignified and queenly air and an extraordinary love for animals. At this time, also, she met the Archduchess' mother, the Crown Princess Stephanie, daughter of Leopold of Belgium, whose life in the Austrian court was one of continued unhappiness, due to her unpopularity with the members of the Hapsburg family. Between the Governess and the little Archduchess an immediate entente cordiale was established.

The author tells of receiving a shock when the "Schlosshauptmann" of the castle called upon her with her salary for the first month. It amounted to 200 gulden ($97), and, she remarks, "truly, 'tis more glory than gold one earns by serving royalty." But parsimony, she says she found, is a trait quite general among the members of the ruling family of Austria, and she even discovered traces of it in the Archduchess, who, however, had not the slightest idea of the relative value of money and who was prodigal in matters in which money was not directly concerned. She gave a demonstration of this one Christmas time when she went to her governess and asked how much a box of paints would cost. About $5, she was told.



"You shouldn't tease dumb animals that way!"

"Grandpapa is giving me silver table ornaments and a horse," she said; "do you think he would be able to afford the box of paints as well?"

After the Archduchess had been given an allowance, the governess relates, it was funny to see her try to make her money go as far as possible, while having no real idea as to its value.

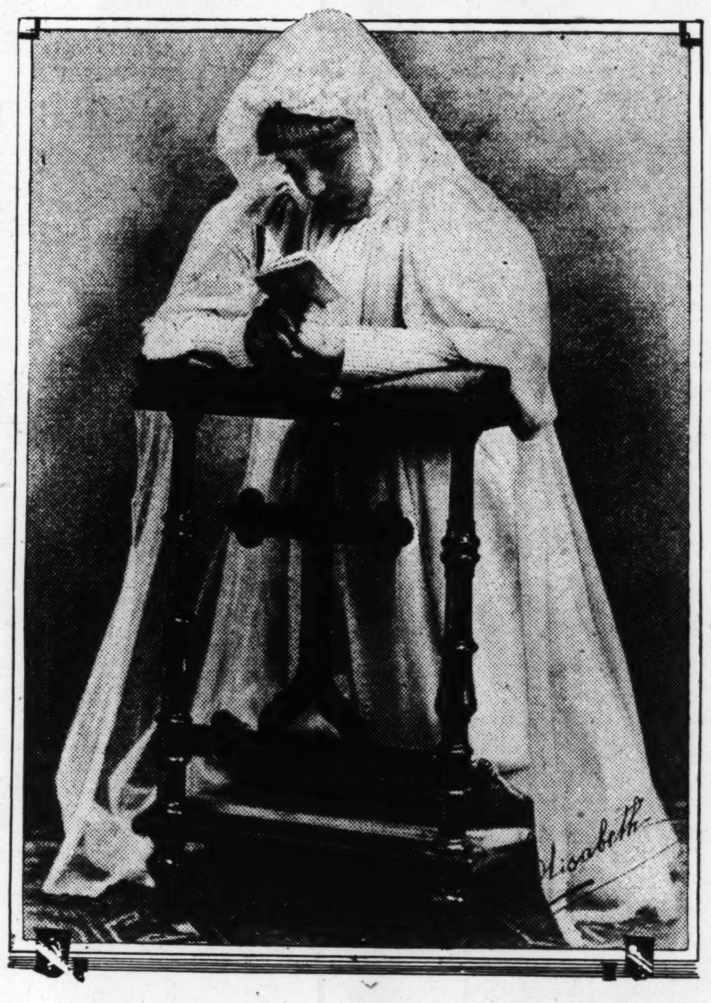
Her first insight into the character of her little charge the governess received one cold, dismal day when they were walking in a park. They found a young cat nearly dead of cold and hunger and the Archduchess insisted upon carrying it back to the castle, where tea was waiting for them. At once the Archduchess gave the cat all her cream and, little by little, all the cream set out for the governess.

"I am not a 'thing,' I as an Archduchess!"

"I told her," the authoress relates, "that if she gave the cream she must herself do without it. It was an idea so new to her that it was fairly staggering. However, she agreed. When the little cat had satisfied its hunger, it suddenly turned on the Archduchess, gave her a deep scratch and ran away. She looked ruefully at her arm and said:

"'It didn't understand that I meant to be kind!'"

Another effort to inculcate self-sacrifice, however, met with less success.

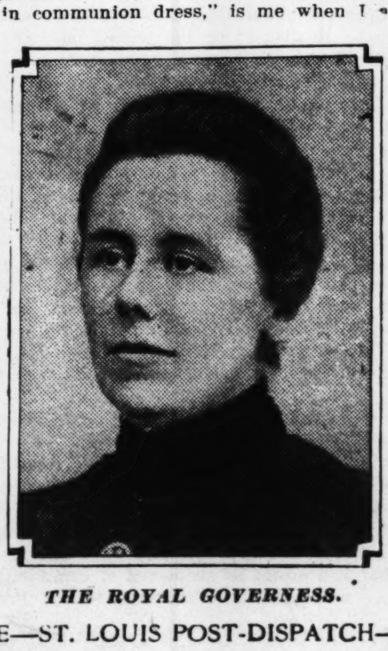


Photograph of the Archduchess Elizabeth, taken after she had made her first communion.

"We had one day in our reading lesson, 'Waste not, want not,'" the governess says. "I tried to explain it to her, but she would not understand. Later a roll of bread fell on the floor during tea, and I was going to pick it up. She said, 'Oh, it does not matter.' So I replied, 'But, Archduchess, it is very wrong to leave bread on the floor; some poor child might be glad to have it.' She looked quite frowningly at me."

One of Elizabeth's favorite companions was her cousin, Princess Dora of Coburg, who visited Laxenburg about this time. Princess Dora is the daughter of Princess Louise of Coburg, whose elopement, first with her riding master and later with her son's tutor, furnished the Austrian court with one of the worst scandals it has ever been called upon to endure. Princess Dora, the court ladies confided to the governess, was an imp of mischief personified, with a worldly knowledge at 15 which she would have been better without, but with an ignorance in matters worth while of a child of 10. The governess was made acquainted with Dora's predilection for madcap pranks the next day when riding with the Princess and the Archduchess. The former, at the reins, suddenly left the road and drove through a woods with gay recklessness, missing trees by a hair's breadth.

The governess seems by this time to have firmly established herself in the affections of her charge, for one day, she says, Elizabeth suddenly exclaimed: "I like you very much; do you like me?" Shortly after this the Archduchess made her first communion and a photograph was taken of her, kneeling demurely before a prie-dieu, with prayerbook in hand. This photograph, with another in ordinary dress, she presented to the governess. "This," she declared, pointing to the picture in communion dress," is me when I am good, and this," indicating the other, "is me when I am naughty."



THE ROYAL GOVERNESS.

"This is me when I'm good and this is me when I'm naughty."

When the governess went one time for a visit to the Badenis she received her first communication from Elizabeth, who was in Munich, and her teaching instinct was outraged. It was a postcard and read as follows:

"I am vell, it es beutiful, mach perfier dan en Wienna. Wienna es in comparesor hored."

Here is the translation:

'I am well. It (Munich) is beautiful, much prettier than in Vienna. Vienna in comparison is horrid."

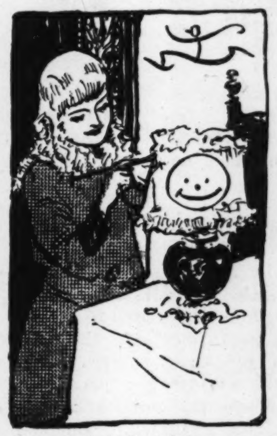
And this from a girl who had had an English governess for four years prior to the coming of the present one. The Archduchess also indulged in a most astonishing taste in note paper, her mentor says—vivid green, pink or blue; "her monogram surmounted by the Imperial Crown embossed in silver, and a huge red seal: 'Der Frau Erzherzogin Elizabeth,' made a startling addition to one's morning post."

War between England and Austria was threatened in 1896 and the Archduchess pleaded with her governess to be "a little for grandpapa" if hostilities came to pass. A year later, when the Greeks were engaged in hostilities with Turkey, a conversation between Franz-Josef and the Empress at dinner was faithfully reported to the governess by the Archduchess, who said that "Grandpapa laughed at the Greeks and grandmamma got angry and took their part."

When the Archduchess went abroad she was the object of reverence and courtesy at the hands of people of all classes, providing her identity was known. She grew careless at times in acknowledging salutes and courtesies and her companion one day at Abbazia took occasion to remonstrate with her. She did not reply, and they walked in silence for a time. Suddenly, climbing a rocky promontory, they came upon an old parish priest, who removed his broad-brimmed clerical hat and saluted them. To the unbounded astonishment of the governess, Elizabeth went close to him and made a deep court courtesy. As they passed on, leaving the old man in open-mouthed amazement, the Archduchess asked, gravely:

"Well, now are you satisfied?"

Not always was she recognized, however, and this gave rise to an incident in the zoological garden at Schoenbrunn. At the bear pit the child leaned over the parapet with a broom and proceeded to poke a small brown bear. Presently the bear snarled angrily, rose on its hind legs and seized the end of the broom. While the Archduchess was pulling and twisting to get the broom away a little old woman of the lower class seized the broom from the Archduchess' hands, pushed her away and exclaimed: "Little girl, you ought to be ashamed to tease dumb animals that way. I wonder that your parents have not taught you better!" With which, having gained possession of the broom, she allowed it to fall into the pit. Then the keepers rushed forward and hustled the indignant old woman away, telling her who the august personage was whom she had accosted so violently. She was terrified, and in a shrill voice cried: "Frau Erzherzogin Elizabeth! Our Emperor's granddaughter! Mein Gott!"



She painted pictures on mirrors and lampshades.

When weather conditions kept her indoors, Elizabeth was hard to amuse. On one occasion, after decorating the governess' apartment by the use of a box of oil paints, drawing figures on the looking glasses and lamp shades, she went into the kitchen looking for further adventure. She made chocolate, which she liked, but was forbidden to eat, but this day she not only ate it all, but scraped the pot clean. Next she cooked some sausages and ate those and looked about her for some more means of mischief.

Discovering a bin of flour, she suddenly dived into it with both hands and pelted her governess with it. Then she flew to the window and emptied what remained in the bin upon the heads of the soldiers standing sentry in the courtyard below. They dared not turn their heads and "angry as I was," the author declares, "I could not help but laugh at the expression of absolute terror which spread over their faces as the white shower descended upon their uniforms.

"But when I came to realize the awful mess my salon was in, I was truly

"THE HARDEST TEN-ROUND BATTLE I EVER FOUGHT"

Personal Recollections of Two Mighty Gladiatorial Contests Related by

Jess Willard and Frank Moran

Jess Willard, born in Kansas, Dec. 29, 1887; weighs 272 pounds; 6 feet 6½ inches tall. "The long, straight-out jab is the best punch I ever had."

ON March 25, Jess Willard, world champion heavyweight pugilist, meets his challenger for the title, Frank Moran of Pittsburg, at Madison Square Garden, in what promises to be the hardest 10-round ring battle ever fought. In the Post-Dispatch Magazine today, each of the contestants tells, first hand, of the hardest 10-round bout he has fought up to the present time.

TOLD BY JESS WILLARD.

"THE hardest 10-round bout I ever fought in was with the late Luther McCarty. McCarty stood 6 feet 3 1-2 inches and weighed 210 pounds. At the time, Aug. 19, 1912, we were both greenhorns in the ring. I had fought perhaps a dozen times, he a few times oftener. Neither of us had ever fought a really good man, so neither of us had a great deal of ring experience that counted.

"The night was hot and the place—Madison Square Garden—was crowded, not to see us box, particularly, for there were other bouts between better known men. The better known men drew the crowd. But we did help to hold 'em awhile.

"Now, as you probably know, I'm a pretty cool card as a general thing. But when the bell rang, and I saw McCarty rush from his corner and come sidling over toward me, a cold douch seemed to fall on my scalp. I felt as a soldier must feel when he hears the first firing charge of a battle; and all the advice my second had been filling me up with left me in a flash.

"McCarty, as you will remember, was a swinging fighter.

"He came at me with a rush and let drive with his right and then his left. They crashed against my jaw with a double shock and jarred me to my feet. Flashes of fire danced before my eyes and my head seemed to be filled with noises. My eyes filmed, I began to rock on my feet and the world spun round like a top. Then another crash. A bomb seemed to burst over my right eye—and I was blind! For a few seconds I groped like a drunken man. Then I saw McCarty's face glaring at me out of a setting of misty clouds. Even as I gazed he rushed at me, and I thrust out my fist to keep him off. Before he could stop, his face banked against my glove and his nose split from top to bottom. With that the bell rang; and it sounded like a church bell to me.

"Again my second filled me up with good advice; and again, as soon as the bell rang for the second round, I forgot it. Somehow I got through that round, and somehow I got through the third. In the fourth I reckoned McCarty to be tiring and I sailed into him. But he seemed to have an Indian rubber face. None of my blows bothered him. Then I tried that shove again. This time I was surprised to see it cut a gash under his eye.

"In the fifth and sixth rounds we both threw caution to the winds. We tore into each other like bulls. It was hammer and tongs and give and take until our breath came in whistling gasps and we were dog-tired.

"When we came up for the seventh I was horrified to find I could hardly lift my arms! I was almost utterly exhausted. Now a punch never hurt me yet. A punch hurts nobody if he's in good condition. But when he's all in as I was and when the fight is not over by a long shot—that's when you get that flabbergasted feeling that you are done for—and it hurts more than any blow you could get.

"When I realized my condition I sweated in pure fright. My arms no longer obeyed my will, my legs were dead. And there was McCarty fighting wild and battering my face and my head and my body. Somehow, I'll never know how, I managed to stand up until the ninth round ended. When the bell rang for the tenth, I stepped out, set my teeth and determined to last out the round, no matter what happened.

"By this time McCarty was as tired as I was. He tired himself out belting me. When he saw he had me going, he had banged away at me at random. For that reason his blows had not landed cleanly. But now he was cautious and swung only blows that he knew would land where he wanted them to.

"Coolly he stepped in, lashed out and landed a wide, powerful swing crashing against my jaw. That put life into me, and by a tremendous effort I could raise my arms. I had no strength to hit, so when he rushed me, I thrust out my glove and shoved him. Again he came in and again I shoved him back.

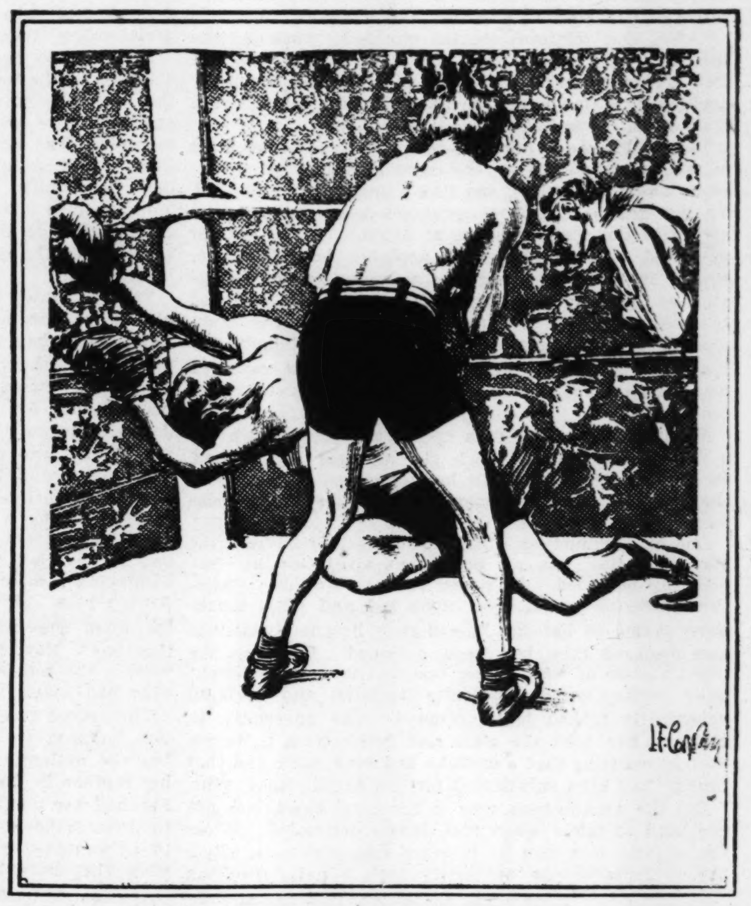
"Just then one of my seconds doused my back with cold water. This gave me a new bracer. McCarty rushed a third time, and once more he staggered back from my outstretched fist. I discovered that he was beginning to stagger and that his face was streaming blood. At the same time I discovered the best punch I ever had—that long jab that I had been using as a shove.

"There's a lot of steam in a long jab. Not only does the blow count for a lot if it lands, but with the whole weight of the body behind the punch it upsets your man's balance and robs him of his chance to come back at you with any force. And the longer the jab the harder you land.

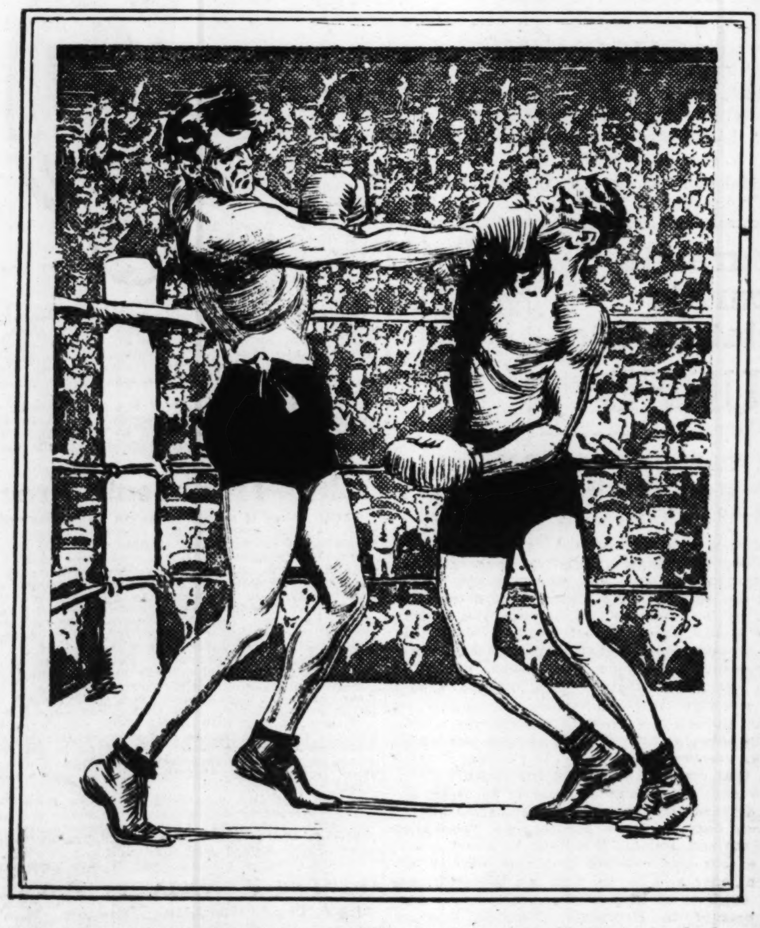
"I made up my mind then and there to do or die. 'Jab him, jab him!' I kept saying to myself through the mistiness of weakness that was creeping over me. 'You've only got to last a couple of minutes more!'

"So I went for Luther and began shoving him with both hands. The crowd were on their feet, roaring. Just as the bell rang I gave him one last shove that sent him reeling toward the ropes. It was all over.

"The next day the papers called the fight a draw."



"Just as the referee cried 'NINE!'" relates Moran, "Palzer dragged himself to his feet and made a dive for me with the fury of a maniac."



"I had no strength to hit," says Willard, "so when McCarty rushed me I thrust out my glove and shoved him."

By FRANK MORAN.

AL PALZER was the man with whom I fought my hardest 10-round fight. It was at the Clermont Avenue Skating Rink in Brooklyn, on March 9, 1911.

That fight was not only the hardest 10-round battle I ever fought, but the hardest fight of any duration that I was ever in. Both of us were nearly unrecognizable when it was over. Indeed, Palzer was never the same man after it, for in our second fight I was able to knock him out in seven rounds.

At the time of the first fight, however, Al was a hulking big fellow, standing well over six feet, and weighing about 215 pounds. He had a terrific kick. I know. I felt it a good many times during the fight.

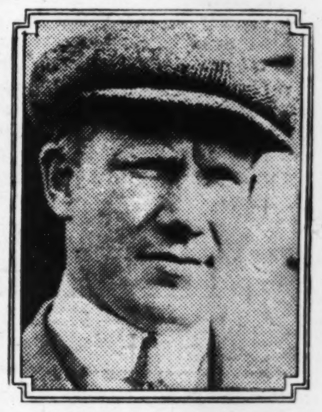
That battle will stand out in my memory the longest day I live. From the time the gong sounded at the beginning of the fight until it marked the end, I can compare that set-to to nothing but a whirligig. And such a whirligig! We fought a rushing, smashing fight from the start, and there was not a let-up from that point on. The rink was crowded with people and their howling sounded like the roarings of a thousand bulls of Bashan.

But with the firsh clash I forgot everything but the Iowan before me, who kept boring in with the ferocity of a man who had gone crazy. There was no blocking. We didn't even attempt to block. There was no time to block. We simply whaled away at each other—and at the end of the first round we were both sorry spectacles. The one thing that I distinctly remember of that first round was Palzer's first blow. It took me squarely over the left eye, and opened a deep gash. I still carry the scar.

This sort of fighting lasted until the fifth round. Then I suddenly lashed out with a right that landed flush on Al's chin. He toppled over, and then crashed down to the floor. I thought it was all over. He lay there all crumpled up for what seemed an age. At last he stirred. Then he began to crawl toward the ropes.

Just as the referee cried "NINE!" he got his feet under him, and he immediately made a dive for me with the fury of a maniac.

Then came that ninth round. I was battling hard and beginning to feel like a winner. Suddenly Palzer swung and missed a wide, sweeping right. I ducked—and ducked into a flash of chain lightning! I felt as though I had been suddenly thrown headlong into a gigantic cocktail shaker and whirled round and round. Then the floor flew up and cracked me on the head, yet the next thing I knew we were both in the middle of the ring mixing it like mad.



Frank Moran, born Cleveland, O., March 18, 1887; 6 feet 1 inch tall; weighs 202 pounds. "A rare combination of brains and stamina."

When the bell rang for the tenth round, to get out into that ring again was one of the most difficult things I ever did in my life. But I kept telling myself that I had to do it, so I gritted my teeth and went in. A stinging crack on the jaw made me all the more determined, and I walked into Al Palzer for all I was worth. I began pumping them into his stomach with all the strength of my arms. Again I felt him "giving" to the punches, and when the gong ended the fight I was actually rejoicing in the battle.

I had won.

When it was all over I was told that I had turned a complete somersault in the air when I was hit with a short left jolt in the ninth. That was the chain lightning I had ducked into. But they added that I had not stayed down a second—that I bounced off the floor like a rubber ball.

Why There Is So Much Eye "Trouble."

AMONG the many circumstances in modern civilization tending to impair human vision is improper illumination, either natural or artificial. Too intense light is as bad, perhaps worse, than poor lighting. Eyes are not merely optical adjuncts; they are integral parts of the body, really expanded portions of the brain. They mutually affect the functioning of most other organs; inefficient eyes cause many chronic headaches, much depression and bodily fatigue, most indigestions, many (some believe, practically all) of the aberrations of genius and of the alleged demi-fous, the half-witted.

Any organ exercised well within its limits tends to increase in power and facility; if persistently overworked it becomes progressively unable for any work at all. One habitually using his eyes in strong light decomposes his "visual purple" faster than it can be regenerated. Even normal eyes are ruined by overuse, especially in lowered general health; and as most eyes are abnormal, or at least not perfect as visual machinery, many people have to cope not only with bad environment and lowered health, but also with inherent optical defects. Dr. Alice M. Alger, whose knowledge of the eye is peculiarly full and exact, considers that because of the many newly invented methods of commercial lighting, by gas and by electricity the composition of light as well as its intensity have come to require serious consideration. Illumination made up of red and yellow rays of the spectrum is the best for visual purposes.

annoyed and exclaimed: 'You are a dirty little thing!' At that all the fun fled from her eyes. She drew herself up, looking ridiculously royal, despite the smudges of chocolate on her pretty cheeks and nose and the flour all over her frock. 'I'm not a thing; I am an Archduchess,' she replied. Taking the cue instantly, I made a deep courtesy, and responded: 'I regret my faux pas, Imperial Highness. I shall not forget again.'

"After that relations seemed strained. Then, as she was about to leave, tears rushed into her eyes, she flew across the salon and, flinging her arms around my neck, hugged me close, crying: 'No, no, I am not a dirty little thing, but a dear little thing!'"

The Archduchess' fondness for animals included birds of all kinds, and though the royal aviary included several hundred varieties, she had a name for each bird. To her delight a pair of swallows began nesting one spring in the summer house at Laxenburg and she far preferred watching them to applying herself to her work. But one day there was a funeral in the village and the tolling of the church bells apparently frightened the birds, for they flew away. After a little the Archduchess said very gravely: "Do you mind stopping the lesson, as I want to pray." Her instructor concealed her astonishment as best she could and as gravely consented.

Elizabeth went over to a corner and knelt down for a few minutes, after which she resumed her lessons. In the meantime, the bells having ceased their tolling, the swallows came fluttering back and the Archduchess was intensely pleased.

One of Archduchess Elizabeth's inheritances from the Hapsburg line was an occasional all-consuming fear of being poisoned. At times, so the chronicler states, this obsession would come upon her and when dishes were passed to her she immediately became suspicious and declared they had been poisoned. One day she lifted a glass of wine to her lips, but immediately went quite white, became violently agitated and declared vehemently it had been poisoned. The governess, to reassure her, took the glass and drank from it, immediately realizing that a mistake had been made and that brandy had been substituted for the Archduchess' wine.

But the Archduchess, true to her royal blood, was not the kind to falter when real danger impended. When the country was torn by internal dissensions, in which the students of the university took a part, resulting in their declaring a strike when forbidden to wear the national colors in their hats, the Archduchess and her governess were walking in the Prater one day when they were accosted by a group of students, who demanded to know what were the Archduchess' colors. She drew herself up with real royal dignity and replied, rather disdainfully: "Gold and black." The students looked aghast for a second, for those are the imperial colors, then took to their heels.

Following a short visit to England, the governess returned to the palace and confided to the Archduchess that her (the governess') sister, Lily, in England, was engaged to be married. This interested Elizabeth immensely. The next day the royal family gathered at Buda Pesth to attend the Hungarian Millennial, the one thousandth anniversary of the coming of the Magyars into Europe. In the midst of the ceremonies, espying Wanda Badeni in the crowd, she leaned over the edge of the royal box and called out shrilly, "Lily is engaged!"

This naturally brings the reader to Elizabeth's own affairs of the heart, which form by far the most interesting chapters of the brief sketch of this royal personage. She had but one, but the world probably never has known until now that had she not taken matters into her own hands she might today be the daughter-in-law of Emperor William of Germany. When the Kaiser was paying a visit to the Austrian court and was dining in the Hofburg castle he espied the little Archduchess up in the musicians' gallery and asked who she was. Upon being told, he asked to be presented. After his return to Berlin he sent his second son to visit the Austrian court with the intention of making a matrimonial alliance between him and the Archduchess. But he counted without the Archduchess, for when she saw the youth she exclaimed: "Marry that boy? Never!" and forthwith retired to bed, from whence she refused to emerge until His Imperial Highness had taken his departure.

The report came out one time that the Archduchess was engaged to Alfonso, the present King of Spain, but she authorized her governess, who was writing to her mother in England, to say that "he won't get me." She had her own ideas of marriage and she gave voice to them to her governess one day, causing that person to be inexpressibly horrified. They were having tea when they noticed a man pacing up and down in front of the apartments of the Crown Princess Stephanie. The governess inquired of the Archduchess who the gentleman was.

"That," she replied, promptly, "is Monsieur Lonyay now, but soon he will be Baron Lonyay, then Count Lonyay, then Prince Lonyay, then he will marry mamma."

"How do you know this, Archduchess," the governess gasped.

"Oh, I know what I see, and I have heard mamma and Aunt Louise talking," then, stirring her tea meditatively, she raised her big, innocent eyes to her companion and remarked slowly:

"I, too, shall make a mesalliance."

Both her prophecies came true. Her mother married Prince Lonyay and she made a mesalliance, which came about in this way, according to the writer:

"One night, at a court ball, she saw and danced with Prince Otto Windischgratz. The next day she went to her royal grandpapa and decisively announced that she wished to marry the said gentleman. The kind old Emperor, whose dearest wish is to have everyone about him quite happy, sent for the young man and, smiling, informed him of the honor which he was about to bestow upon him in the form of his granddaughter's hand in marriage. The young officer was overwhelmed; he blushed, stammered and bowed. The Emperor, thinking all this emotion was gratitude for the honor he was about to receive, beamed upon him and, waving his hand, said gently: 'It is all quite settled; you may go to her.' Then the deeply confused and equally distressed officer burst out: 'Pardon, sir, but I am fianced already.'

"The Emperor, perhaps not quite taking in the import of this announcement, and perhaps thinking of his granddaughter's happy face, again waved his hand and said: ''Tis no matter. You can easily arrange that,' and thereupon dismissed the agitated young man. Of course it is not every day that a young army officer has a Royal Princess thrust into his arms with an Emperor's blessing. So, naturally enough, the previous engagement was broken off and the Archduchess Elizabeth made a mesalliance, as she told me she would do."

Strangely, considering the manner of its arrangement, the marriage proved a happy one. The couple began their married life in Prague and later settled down quietly in Hungary.

that we were fully prepared to weather the storm.

"We have now become in reality what our philosopher Fichte once foresaw—'an isolated commercial nation'—and are engaged in the most unique experiment ever known in history; namely, that of a nation of 70,000,000 souls shut up, as it were, in a fortress, and obliged to live solely upon its own resources. It is such a 'sporting proposition'—again to make use of an American idiom—that personally I am surprised to find that the outside world jealously withholds the recognition always granted a plucky deed, be it performed by a friend or a foe. I console myself with the thought that perhaps the world has grown so accustomed to German achievement along all lines that our present task, in spite of its magnitude, is accepted as a matter of course. Had any other country, however, been placed in the same position of splendid isolation, I fancy that the tribunes of the nations would have resounded with applause.

"Not all of the credit is to be given to those of us who have taken the initiative in organizing and engineering the work, for we would not have been able to achieve such remarkable results had we not had whole-hearted co-operation of the women throughout the empire. Someone has said that every German is a born policeman, and to that might be added that every German woman is a born housekeeper.

"Economy has become a fine art in Germany at present, and housewives vie with each other in the work of conserving the economic resources of the nation. The economies often appear to the outside world ridiculously small and insignificant, but is it not you Americans who have a nursery rhyme running:

"'Little drops of water, little grains of sand,
Make a mighty ocean and the pleasant land?'"

Cured His RUPTURE

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. Pullen, Carpenter, 354 B. Marcellus Avenue, Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.—ADV.

The Teeth of the Tiger

what she really was to him: a crafty, cunning, cruel, blood-thirsty monster. No, no, the man was lying with infernal cleverness.

Gaston Sauverand was watching the face of his former enemy. Standing close to Don Luis, his features lit up with the expression of feelings and passions which he no longer strove to check, he asked, in a low voice:

"You believe me, don't you?"

"No, I don't," said Perenna, hardening himself to resist the man's influence.

"You must!" cried Sauverand, with a fierce outburst of violence. "You must believe in the strength of my love. It is the cause of everything. My hatred for you comes only from my love. Marie is my life. If she were dead, there would be nothing for me to do but die. Oh, this morning, when I read in the papers that the poor woman had opened her veins—and through your fault, after Hippolyte's letters accusing her—I did not want to kill you so much as to inflict upon you the most barbarous tortures! My poor Marie, what a martyrdom she must be enduring! * * *

"As you were not back, Florence and I wandered about all morning to have news of her: first around the prison, next to the police office and the law courts. And it was there, in the magistrate's corridor, that I saw you. At that moment you were mentioning Marie Fauville's name to a number of journalists; and you told them that Marie Fauville was innocent; and you informed them of the evidence which you possessed in Marie's favor!

"My hatred ceased then and there, Monsieur. In one second the enemy had become the ally, the master to whom one kneels. So you had had the wonderful courage to repudiate all your work and devote yourself to Marie's rescue! I ran off, trembling with joy and hope, and, as I joined Florence, I shouted, 'Marie is saved! He proclaims her innocent! I must see him and speak to him!' * * *

"We came back here. Florence refused to lay down her arms and begged me not to carry out my plan before your new attitude in the case was confirmed by deeds. I promised everything that she asked. But my mind was made up. And my will was still further strengthened when I had read your declaration in the newspaper. I would place Marie's fate in your hands whatever happened and without an hour's delay. I waited for your return and came up here."

He was no longer the same man who had displayed such coolness at the commencement of the interview. Exhausted by his efforts and by a struggle that had lasted for weeks, costing him so much fruitless energy, he was now trembling; and clinging to Don Luis, with one of his knees on the chair beside which Don Luis was standing, he stammered:

"Save her, I implore you! You have it in your power. Yes, you can do anything. In a few days Marie will have ended her life. She cannot go on living in prison. You see, she means to die. No obstacle can prevent her. Oh, if the law requires a criminal I will confess anything that I am asked to. I will joyfully accept every charge and pay every penalty, provided that Marie is free! Save her from prison and death, save her, for God's sake, save her!"

Tears flowed down his anguish-stricken face. Florence also was crying, bowed down with sorrow. And Perenna suddenly felt the most terrible dread steal over him.

Although, ever since the beginning of the interview, a fresh conviction had gradually been mastering him, it was only as it were a glance that he became aware of it. Suddenly he perceived that his belief in Sauverand's words was unrestricted, and that Florence was perhaps not the loathsome creature that he had had the right to think, but a woman whose eyes did not lie and whose face and soul were alike beautiful.

"If only it is not too late!" he muttered.

He staggered under the shock of the sensations and ideas that crowded upon him. Everything clashed in his brain with tragic violence: certainty, joy, dismay, despair, fury. He was struggling in the clutches of the most hideous nightmare; and he already seemed to see a detective's heavy hand descending on Florence's shoulder.

"Come away! Come away!" he cried, starting up in alarm. "It is madness to remain!"

"But the house is surrounded," Sauverand objected.

"And then? Do you think that I will allow for a second?—— No, no, come! We must fight side by side. I shall still entertain some doubts, that is certain. You must destroy them; and we will save Mme. Fauville."

"But the detectives round the house?"

"We'll manage them."

"Weber, the deputy chief?"

"He's not here. And as long as he's not here I'll take everything on myself. Come, follow me, but at some little distance. When I give the signal and not till then"——

He drew the bolt and turned the handle of the door. At that moment someone knocked. It was the butler.

"Well?" asked Don Luis. "Why am I disturbed?"

"The deputy chief detective, M. Weber, is here, sir."

CHAPTER XI.

Routed.

DON LUIS had certainly expected this formidable blow, and yet it appeared to take him unawares. All his buoyancy left him, and he felt like a retreating army which, after almost making good its escape, suddenly finds itself brought to a stop by a steep mountain. With Weber at the head of the detectives, any attempt to force a way out would have been absurd.

"Did you let him in?" he asked.

"You did not tell me not to, sir."

"Is he alone?"

"No, sir, the deputy chief has six men with him. He has left them in the courtyard."

"And where is he?"

"He asked me to take him to the first floor. He expected to find you in your study, sir."

"Does he know now that I am with Sergt. Mazeroux and Mlle. Levasseur?"

"Yes, sir."

Perenna thought for a moment and then said:

"Tell him that you have not found me and that you are going to look for me in Mlle. Levasseur's rooms. Perhaps he will go with you. All the better if he does."

And he locked the door again.

The struggle through which he had just passed did not show itself on his face; and, now that all was lost, now that he was called upon to act, he recovered that wonderful composure which never abandoned him at decisive moments. He went up to Florence. She was very pale and was silently weeping. He said:

"You must not be frightened, Mademoiselle. If you obey me implicitly, you will have nothing to fear."

She did not reply and he saw that she still mistrusted him. And he almost rejoiced at the thought that he would compel her to believe in him.

"Listen to me," he said to Sauverand. "In case I should not succeed after all, there are still several things which you must explain."

"What are they?" asked Sauverand, who had lost none of his coolness.

Then, collecting all his riotous thoughts, resolved to omit nothing, but at the same time to speak only what was essential, Don Luis asked, in a calm voice:

"Where were you on the morning before the murder, when a man carrying an ebony walking stick and answering to your description entered the Cafe du Pont-Neuf immediately after Inspector Verot?"

"At home."

"Are you sure that you did not go out?"

"Absolutely sure. And I am also sure that I have never been to the Cafe du Pont-Neuf, of which I had never even heard."

"Good. Next question. Why, when you learned all about this business, did you not go to the Prefect of Police or the examining magistrate? It would have been simpler for you to give yourself up and tell the exact truth than to engage in this unequal fight."

"I was thinking of doing so. But I at once realized that the plot hatched against me was so clever that no bare statement of the truth would have been enough to convince the authorities. They would never have believed me. What proof could I supply? None at all—whereas, on the other hand, the proofs against us were overwhelming and undeniable. Were not the marks of the teeth evidence of Marie's undoubted guilt? And were not my silence, my flight, the shooting of Chief Inspector Ancenis so many crimes? No, if I would rescue Marie, I must remain free."

"But she could have spoken herself?"

"And confessed our love? Apart from the fact that her womanly modesty would have prevented her, what good would it have done? On the contrary, it meant lending greater weight to the accusation. That was just what happened when Hippolyte Fauville's letters, appearing one by one, revealed to the police the as yet unknown motives of the crimes imputed to us. We loved each other."

"How do you explain the letters?"

"I can't explain them. We did not know of Fauville's jealousy. He kept it to himself. And then, again, why did he suspect us? What can have put it into his head that we meant to kill him? Where did his fears, his nightmares, come from? It is a mystery. He wrote that he had letters of ours in his possession: what letters?"

"And the marks of the teeth, those marks which were undoubtedly made by Mme. Fauville?"

"I don't know. It is all incomprehensible."

"You don't know either what she can have done after leaving the opera between 12 and 2 in the morning?"

"No. She was evidently lured into a trap. But how and by whom? And why does she not say what she was doing? More mystery."

"You were seen that evening, the evening of the murder, at Auteuil station. What were you doing there?"

"I was going to the Boulevard Suchet and I passed under Marie's windows. Remember that it was a Wednesday. I came back on the following Wednesday, and, still knowing nothing of the tragedy or of Marie's arrest, I came back again on the second Wednesday, which was the evening on which you found out where I lived and informed Sergt. Mazeroux against me."

"Another thing. Did you know of the Mornington inheritance?"

"No, nor Florence, either; and we have every reason to think that Marie and her husband knew no more about it than we did."

"That barn at Damigni: was it the first time that you had entered it?"

"Yes; and our astonishment at the sight of the two skeletons hanging from the rafters equaled yours."

Don Luis was silent. He cast about for a few seconds longer to see if he had any more questions to ask. Then he said:

"That is all I wanted to know. Are you, on your side, certain that everything that is necessary has been said?"

"Yes."

"This is a serious moment. It is possible that we may not meet again. Now you have not given me a single proof of your statements."

"I have told you the truth. To a man like yourself, the truth is enough. As for me, I am beaten. I give up the struggle, or, rather, I place myself under your orders. Save Marie."

"I will save the three of you," said Perenna. "The fourth of the mysterious letters is to make its appearance tomorrow: that leaves ample time for us to lay our heads together and study the matter fully. And tomorrow evening I shall go there and, with the help of all that you have told me, I shall prove the innocence of you all. The essential thing is to be present at the meeting on May 25."

He pushed the door ajar and, after listening outside, said:

"Don't move. And don't open the door to anybody, on any pretext whatever, before I come to fetch you. I shall not be long."

He locked the door behind him and went down to the first floor. Through the window on the landing he saw the detectives guarding the courtyard. He counted six of them. And he also saw the deputy chief at one of the windows of his study, watching the courtyard and keeping in touch with his detectives.

He went through the drawing room and entered his study. Weber saw him. The two enemies were face to face.

The deputy chief's face bore an expression of mingled joy and anxiety. For the first time he had permission, he had orders, to fight that accursed Don Luis, against whom he had never been able to satisfy his hatred.

He crossed swords with a jest.

"I see that you were not in Mlle. Levasseur's lodge, as your man pretended."

"My man spoke in accordance with my instructions. I was in my bedroom, upstairs. But I wanted to finish the job before I came down."

"And is it done?"

"It's done. Florence Levasseur and Gaston Sauverand are in my room, gagged and bound. You have only to accept delivery of the goods."

"Gaston Sauverand!" cried Weber. "Then it was he who was seen coming in?"

"Yes. He was simply living with Florence Levasseur, whose lover he is."

"Oho!" said the deputy chief, in a bantering tone. "Her lover!"

"Yes; and when Sergt. Mazeroux brought Florence Levasseur to my room, to question her out of hearing of the servants, Sauverand, foreseeing the arrest of his mistress, had the audacity to join us. He tried to rescue her from our hands."

"And you checkmated him?"

"Yes."

It was clear that the deputy chief did not believe one word of the story. He knew through M. Desmalions and Mazeroux that Don Luis was in love with Florence; and Don Luis was not the man even through jealousy to hand over a woman whom he loved. He increased his attention.

"Good business!" he said. "Take me up to your room. Was it a hard struggle?"

"Not very. I managed to disarm the scoundrel. All the same, Mazeroux got stabbed in the thumb."

"Nothing serious?"

"Oh, dear, no; but he has gone to have his wound dressed at the chemist's."

The deputy chief stopped, greatly surprised.

"What! Isn't Mazeroux in your room with the two prisoners?"

"I never told you that he was."

"No, but your butler"——

"The butler made a mistake. Mazeroux went out a few minutes before you came."

"It's funny," said Weber, watching Don Luis closely, "but my men all think he's here. They haven't seen him go out."

"They haven't seen him go out?" echoed Don Luis, pretending to feel anxious. "But, then, where can he be? He told me he wanted to have his thumb seen to."

The deputy chief was growing more and more suspicious. Evidently Perenna was trying to get rid of him by sending him in search of the sergeant.

"I will send one of my men," he said. "Is the chemist's near?"

"Just around the corner, in the Rue de Bourgoyne. Besides, we can telephone."

"Oh, we can telephone!" muttered Weber.

He was quite at a loss and looked like a man who does not know what is going to happen next. He moved slowly toward the instrument, while barring the way to Don Luis to prevent his escaping. Don Luis therefore retreated to the telephone box, as if forced to do so, took down the receiver with one hand, and, calling, "Hullo! Hullo! Saxe, 2409," with the other, which was resting against the wall, he cut one of the wires with a pair of pliers which he had taken off the table as he passed.

"Hullo! Are you there? Is that 2409? Are you the chemist? * * * Hullo! * * * Sergt. Mazeroux of the detective service is with you, isn't he? Eh? What? What do you say? But it's too awful! Are you sure? Do you mean to say the wound is poisoned?"

Without thinking what he was doing, the deputy chief pushed Don Luis aside and took hold of the receiver. The thought of the poisoned wound was too much for him.

"Are you there?" he cried, keeping an eye on Don Luis and motioning to him not to go away. "Are you there? Oh, hang it, why don't you answer!"

Suddenly he let go the instrument, looked at the wires, perceived that they had been cut, and turned round, showing a face that clearly expressed the thought in his mind.

Perenna was standing a couple of yards behind him, leaning carelessly against the woodwork of the arch, with his left hand passed between his back and the woodwork. He was smiling genially.

He stood aside and pressed the button that worked the iron curtain. The heavy panel came crashing to the floor. The deputy chief was a prisoner.

"That's a hundred millions gone to Jericho," grinned Don Luis. "A pretty trick, but a bit expensive. Good-by, Mornington inheritance!"

As he spoke, he locked, on the inside, the folding doors between the drawing room and the first-floor anteroom; then, returning to his study, he locked the door between this room and the drawing room.

The deputy chief was banging at the iron curtain with all his might and shouting so loud that they were bound to hear him outside through the open window.

"You're not making half enough noise, deputy!" cried Don Luis. "Let's see what we can do."

He took his revolver and fired off three bullets, one of which broke a pane. Then he quickly left his study by a small, massive door, which he carefully closed behind him. He was now in the secret passage which ran round both rooms and ended at another door leading to the anteroom. He opened this door wide and was thus able to hide behind it.

Attracted by the shots and the noise, the detectives were already rushing through the hall and up the staircase. When they reached the first floor and had gone through the anteroom, as the drawing room doors were locked, the only outlet open to them was the passage at the end of which they could hear the deputy shouting. They all six darted down it.

When the last of them had vanished round the bend in the passage, Don Luis softly pushed back the door that concealed him and locked it like the rest. The six detectives were as safely imprisoned as the deputy chief.

He himself went up the second flight without undue haste. But, on the last stair, he was seized with such a feeling of elation that he shouted:

"Victory! The road is clear!"

The boudoir door was opposite. He entered. A stifled oath escaped his lips.

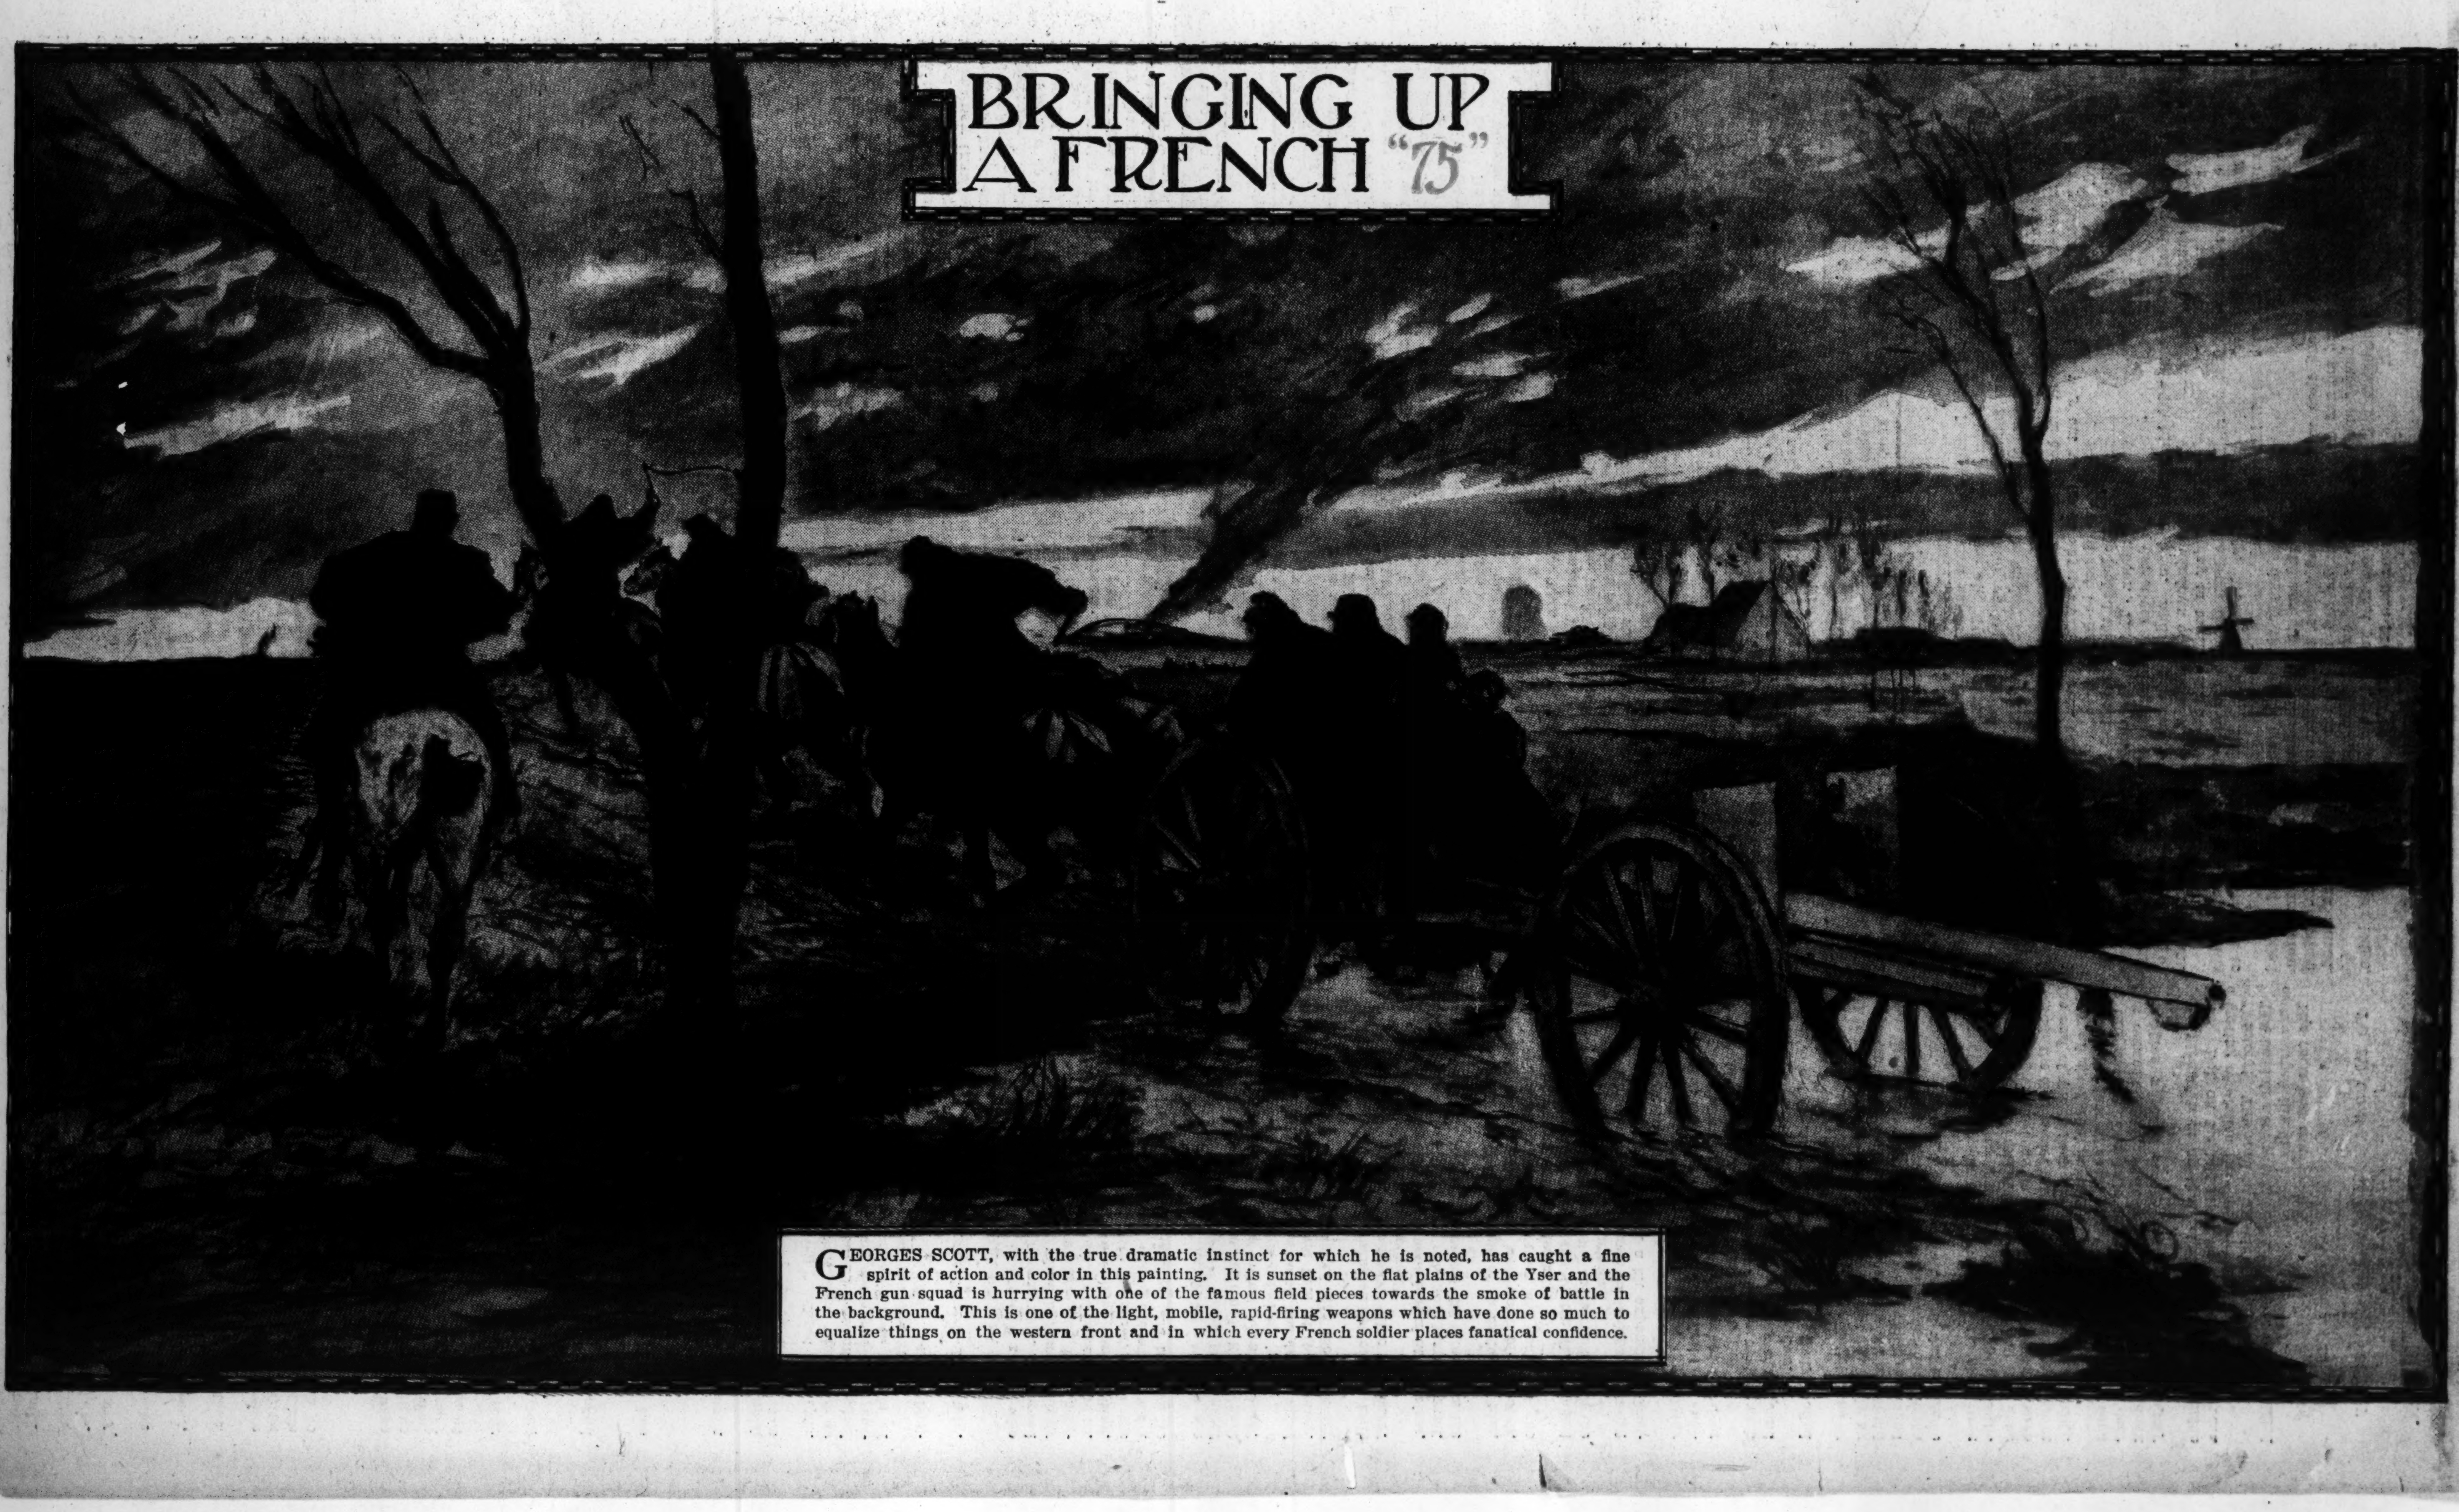
BRINGING UP A FRENCH "75"



GEORGES SCOTT, with the true dramatic instinct for which he is noted, has caught a fine spirit of action and color in this painting. It is sunset on the flat plains of the Yser and the French gun squad is hurrying with one of the famous field pieces towards the smoke of battle in the background. This is one of the light, mobile, rapid-firing weapons which have done so much to equalize things on the western front and in which every French soldier places fanatical confidence.

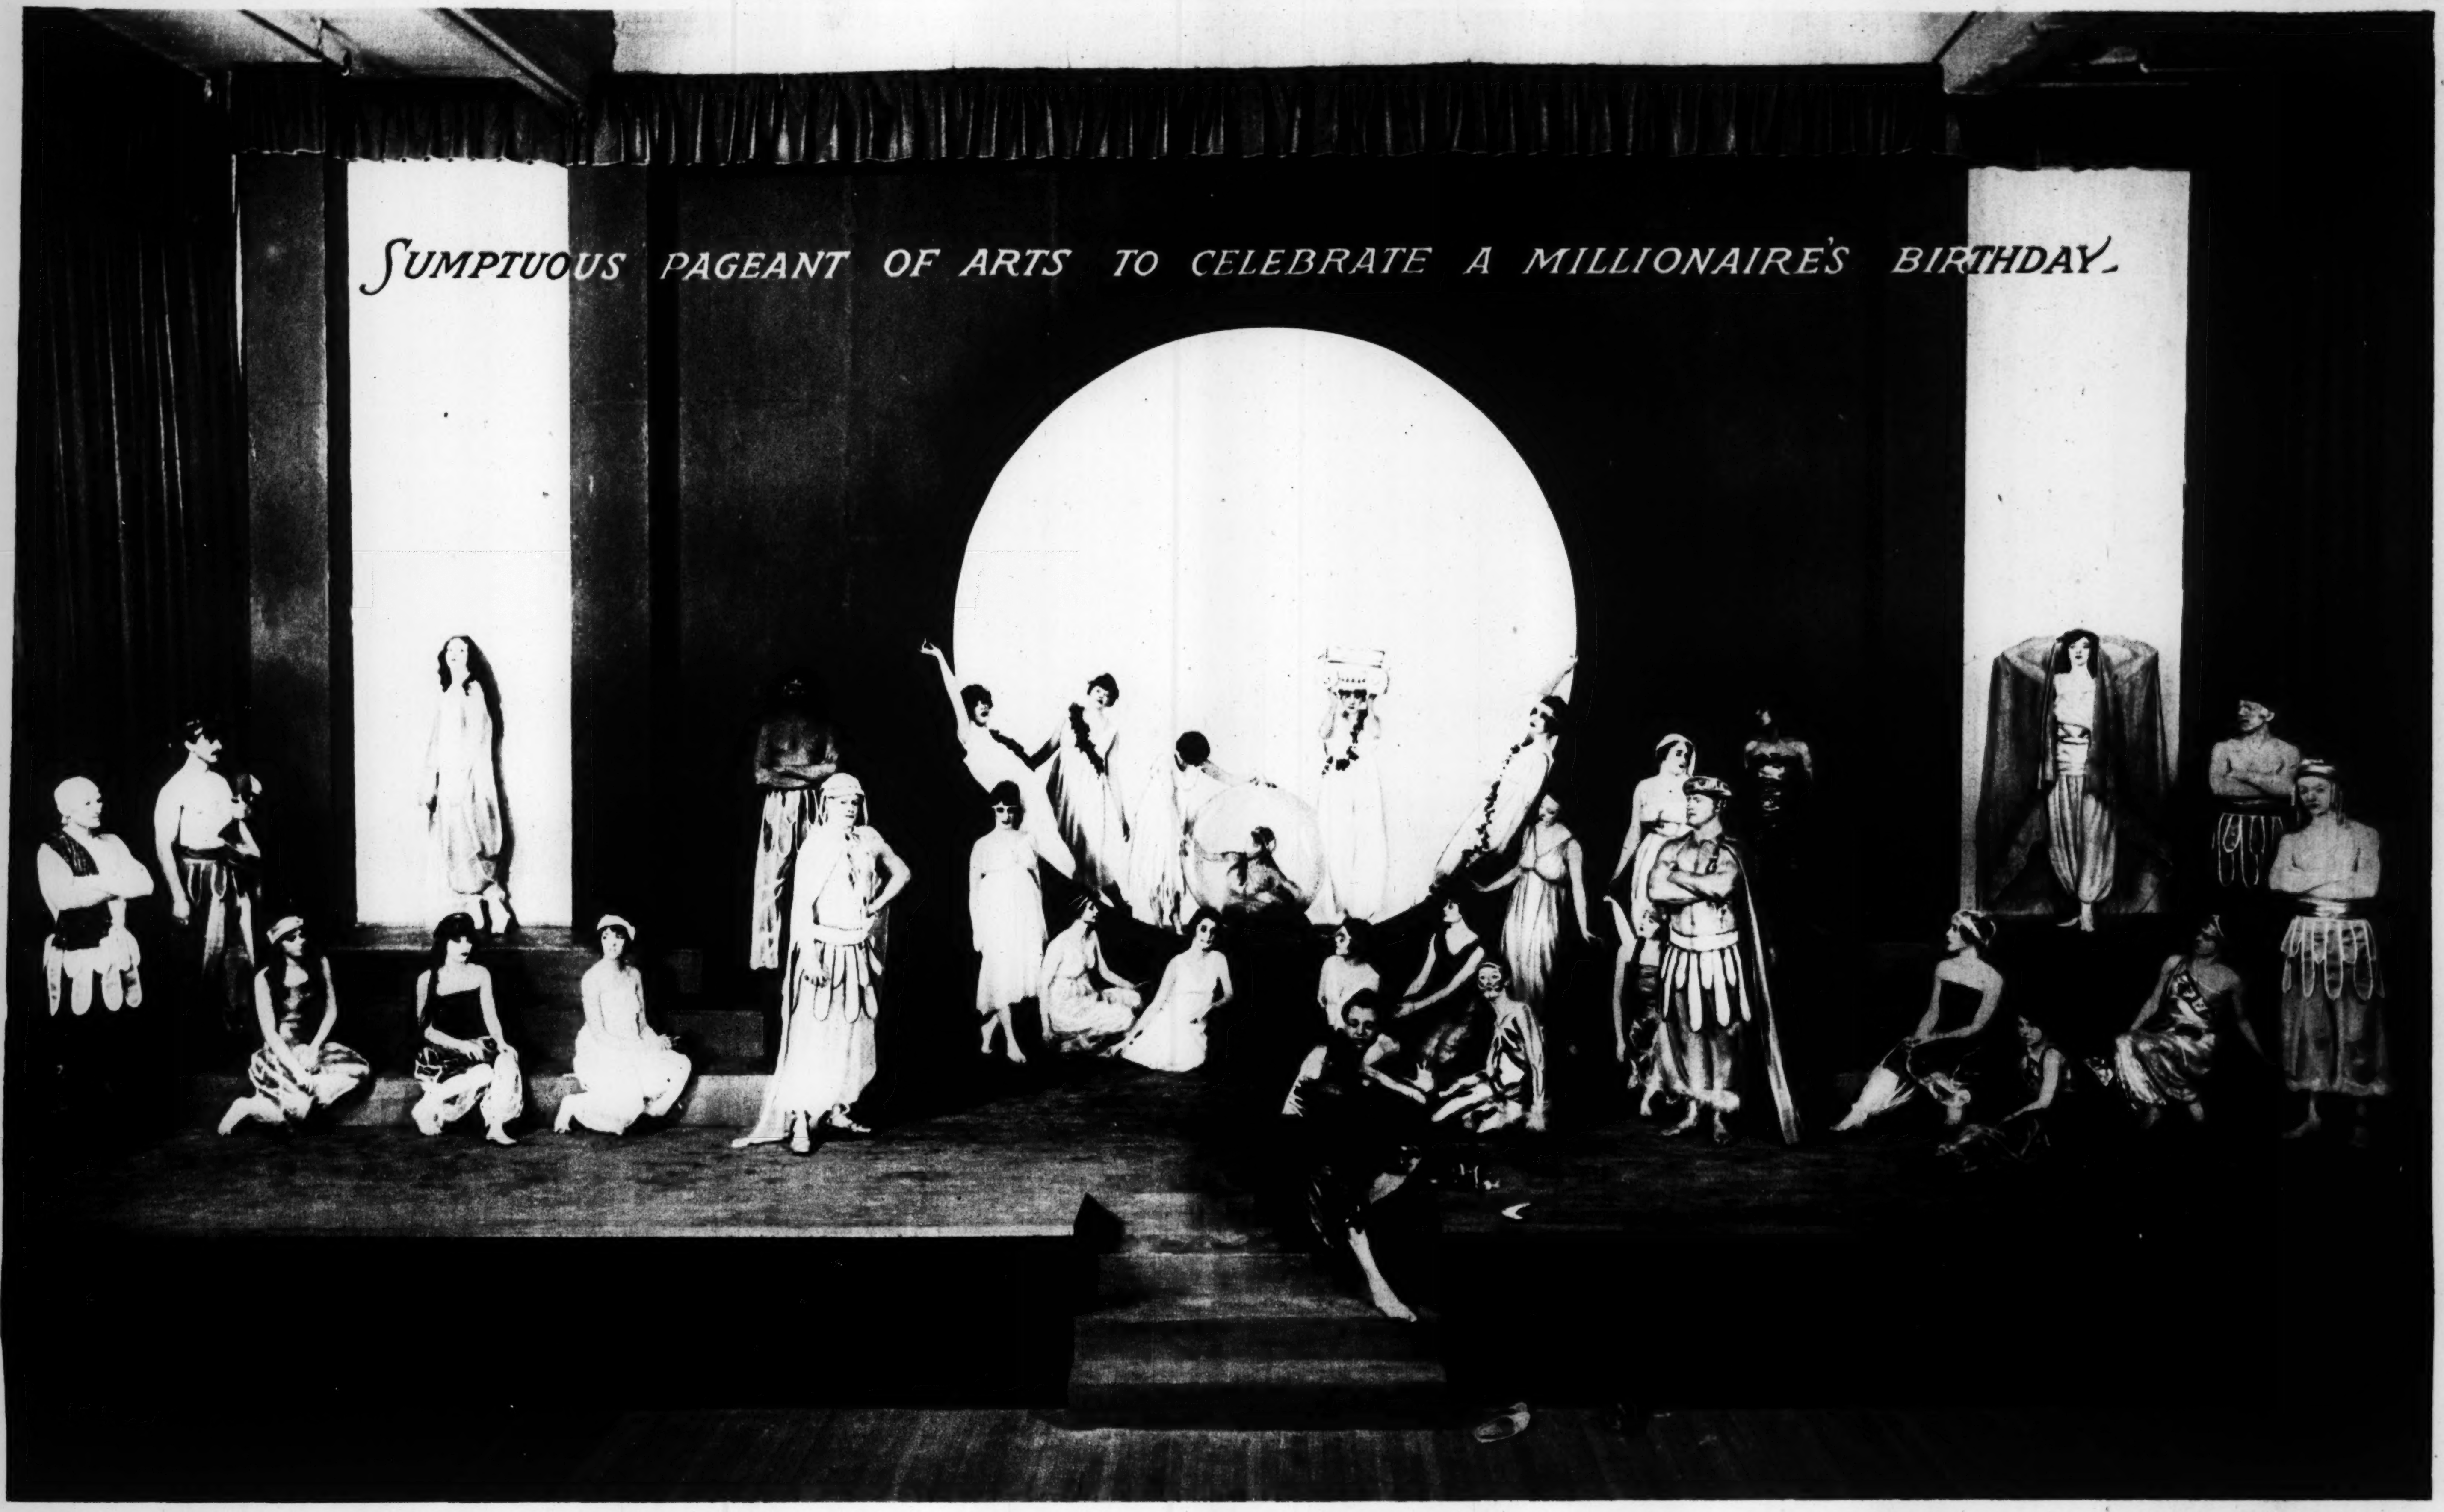
SUMPTUOUS PAGEANT OF ARTS TO CELEBRATE A MILLIONAIRE'S BIRTHDAY.



This remarkable photograph reproduces a scene brilliant for the symmetry of its grouping, from the masque, "The Quest of Beauty" arranged by Joseph Lindon Smith for the 68 th birthday of Louis C. Tiffany, member of the wealthy New York jewelry house, and himself a painter of note and one of the most accomplished art connoisseurs in the country. The masque, in which 45 performers took part, was given Feb. 18, on an ample stage in Mr. Tiffany's spacious studio, Madison avenue and Forty-fifth street, New York. About 300 guests were present. The spectacle was meant to typify the joyous aspirations of the artist. The large circular opening in the center became a section of blue sky, sparkling with stars. The figures within this circle, in the photograph, represent Painting, Sculpture and Music, Architecture and Beauty. The little figure within the crystal portrays "Pearl." The staturesque figure in the left panel is "Glass", and that in the right panel is "Clay." The youth on the steps has the part of an "Artist", to his right is seated "Fire", and behind her, with arms folded, is "Gold." Opposite him with one arm akimbo, stands "Silver." A "Youth" portraying Genius, played the principal part in the masque.

The Fourth City Old and New in Drawings by Hugh Ferriss

This is the second and final installment of ten striking sketches, illustrating the power and romance of St. Louis, which were drawn for the Post-Dispatch Rotogravure Section by Hugh Ferriss, formerly of this city and now of New York.

The publication of the first installment, in last Sunday's Rotogravure Section was an artistic event both because of the skill manifested in the drawings and the perfection of their reproduction, which was made possible, in newspaper work, only by the new Rotogravure process.

Many readers will desire to keep these illustrations permanently.
